TSC boss Nancy Macharia

The Teachers Service Commission yesterday suffered a blow when a court quashed a medical scheme agreement it entered into with AON Minet on behalf of a union.

The Employment and Labour Relations Court said the teachers' employer violated the rights of Kenya Union of Post Primary Education Teachers and its members when it issued a directive to the union to contribute to the scheme.

"TSC's directive to Kuppet members to join, be party to, be members of, and contribute to the medical scheme from AON Minet is quashed," the judge said. The

BY BONIFACE MWANGI
mwangib@ke.nationmedia.com

Everybody loves a good place to rest, probably after working for months without a break.

And the place is the Queen's Picnic Site, located inside the Aberdares National Park, a habitat that is also a mine of historical information.

A picnic table is set at the entrance to a waterfall and a cave that was once used by Dedan Kimathi, the Mau Mau freedom fighter.

The cave, which lies at the base of the 10,000ft Magura waterfall, was christened the Queen's Cave after Queen Elizabeth and her husband, Prince Philip, were served lunch here by Major Eric George Sherbrooke Walker in 1952. The site offers an ideal place for picnics, for a staircase has since been constructed leading into the cave.

Down the fall is Magura River, a major tributary of River Tana that is famously known as Gura River downstream. It is the fastest in Africa and is best for sports fishing.

According to Simon Wachira, the chief executive officer of the Mt Kenya Tourism Circuit, only trout fish survives in this river due to its high altitude and cool temperatures.

The Queen's Picnic Site is surrounded by moorland, a vegetation of giant heather and tussock grass. Dozens of buffaloes, baboons, waterbuck and eland gulp the cool waters side by side.

"We have quite a good number of wildlife in this area, among them waterbucks, hyenas, eagles, kingfishers, wild ducks and other species of birds," says Mr Wachira. "Also common are lions and the black leopard."

He says since the area has plenty of wildlife and beautiful vegetation, members of the British monarchy chose it and had their lunch here.

Before that, however, the cave was used by Kimathi as a hideout from the colonial army that pursued him and his fighters during the State of Emergency in the 1950s. The cave offered a perfect hideout because it was invisible from aerial patrols.

The Queen's Picnic Site is just one of the many attraction sites that draw visitors to the Aberdares. "The site offers a perfect photography scene while the pool beneath the fall is best for nude dipping," says Mr Wachira.

It can be reached by air, since it is near an airstrip, and by road through Nyeri, past the Kiandogoro gate, and via Naivasha through the Mutubio gate.

Kuppet wins court battle with employer over medical scheme judge also prohibited TSC from requiring Kuppet members to contribute to the scheme.

This means Kuppet's agreement with the National Hospital Insurance Fund will continue uninterrupted.

The NHIF deal will allow Kuppet members to lose only half of their medical allowance but enjoy the same services as those provided by Aon Minet, which had been contracted by the TSC.

Immediately after the ruling, Kuppet Deputy Secretary-General Moses Nthurima asked the commission to refund teachers' money deducted for the Aon Minet scheme.

Kuppet National Vice-Chairman Julius Korir said the ruling was a major victory for union members and called on teachers who have not joined it to do so immediately.

"We have a very good scheme that will benefit our members and those who will come to join us," Mr Korir told journalists outside the court.

The officials and union members from different branches joined hands and sang to welcome the verdict.

In its application, Kuppet told the court that the medical scheme procured from AON Minet had been entered into by TSC in disregard to the members' constitutional right to join a scheme of their choice.

The union added that the deductions amounted to unfair labour practice and was against the law.

"The obligation on the members whose hard-earned salary is subject to deductions on account of this flawed and irregularly obtained scheme amounts to an arbitrary deprivation of their right to property," Kuppet, through its lawyer Andrew Wanda-bwa, said.

Kuppet had also said that TSC's unilateral decision amounted to unfair administrative action.

Kenya Airways chiefs probed

CORRESPONDENT

The government is investigating the role of Kenya Airways management in the Sh26 billion loss that the airline recently recorded.

National Treasury Secretary Henry Rotich said an overhaul of the management was among the options being considered.

"We are looking at all aspects, including doing an audit to determine what role the management played in the collapse of KQ."

By last evening, he was held up in a meeting with the airline's bosses at Serena Hotel in Nairobi.

"This is just a plenary meeting that we are holding with the management to see how we can bail out the company,"

Mr Rotich said, adding that their priority was to find ways to turn around the firm.

The government was yet to determine how much money it would pump into the company and the amount would only be known after an audit, he said.

A turnaround strategy is expected to be ready in two months.

The government, through the National Treasury, owns 29.8 per cent shares in the firm, while Dutch airline KLM also listed among top shareholders, with 26 per cent.

Two foreign firms — McKinsey and Seabury — have been hired to examine what went wrong and provide viable solutions.

The government has also sent experts and external auditors to investigate the affairs of the airline.

Seven pupils drown in sea

CORRESPONDENT

Seven pupils drowned yesterday as they tried to swim in the Indian Ocean.

Three bodies were recovered but four others were missing by yesterday night.

The Standard Eight pupils from Murang'a County were swimming in the sea close to Bidi Badu Beach Bar at Diani seafront in Kwale County.

The pupils aged between 13 and 15 years, from St Martin Primary School Kahuro, were in a Coastal tour as part of preparations for the Kenya Certificate of Primary Education (KCPE) scheduled for November.

Sources from the beach told the Nation on phone that the 56 pupils had gone to the beach front to swim when disaster struck.

"Normally, there are trained divers who guide swimmers but the school's teacher said they had their own host who will guide the pupils," the sources said. The pupils, according to the sources, arrived at 1 pm before changing into their swimming costumes and getting into the ocean.

But the tides overwhelmed the swimmers.

"The seven victims started drowning and called for help. But it was too late as the sea waves swallowed them," the source added.

Contacted on phone, the Kwale County commissioner confirmed three bodies had been recovered and four were missing.

"We are doing our best and operations are ongoing right now," he said.

Local divers were still looking for the bodies yesterday evening. Kwale Governor Salim Mvurya was among those at the seafront monitoring the rescue operation.

Teachers from the school were also at the scene.

Governors appeal for funds to avert strikes

BY LABAN ROBERT

rlaban@ke.nationmedia.com

Governors have asked the National Treasury to release emergency funds for counties to pay salaries and avert strikes.

Council of Governors Chairman Peter Munya said in Kilifi County yesterday if the money is not released soon there would be serious service disruptions.

"Delays and disagreements on budgets between county executives and assembly members are likely to cause crises. But because salaries are not disputed, we ask the National Treasury to release emergency funds for counties to pay salaries and avert disruption of critical services," Governor Munya said.

He was speaking after addressing National Council of Churches of Kenya delegates at Jumuia Conference Beach Resort.

On Tuesday, the Kenya Medical Practitioners, Pharmacists and Dentists Union warned county governments of looming strikes over unpaid salaries.

At least 37 counties are reported not to have paid last month's salaries.

Nurses in Kilifi County are also threatening to go strike over unpaid allowances approved by the Salaries and Remuneration Commission.

Mr Munya, who is also Meru governor, accused the Treasury of holding on to the funds to try and show counties in bad light and claim they cannot manage devolved functions.

He said governors will continue pushing for an amendment to the Constitution to secure the definite amount of money that must be released to the counties through the Pesa Mashinani initiative.

Mr Munya said in spite of problems of corruption, devolution has brought more good than it is credited with.

"We must secure the percentage that must be remitted to county governments in the supreme law. Having 40 per cent to 45 per cent is sufficient to run the counties. The national government is denying us about Sh280 billion, which can transform the lives of the people," he said.

The Constitution must increase the minimum revenue for the counties from the stated 15 per cent.

He said the national government has been using this section of the Constitution to defend "lean" allocations.

Mr Munya criticised Auditor-General Edward Ouko's recent report showing that about Sh67 billion of public funds were not accounted for in the 2013/2014 financial year.

He defended governors accused in the report of misusing public funds.

For instance, Mombasa County was accused of failing to bank at least Sh496 million. Mr Munya said receipts handed in by counties to Mr Ouko were not taken into account in preparing the final report.

"We were to meet the Auditor-General last week to discuss these matters, but it was not possible. We are trying to find a convenient time to meet him and present our case," he said.

Some MPs have called for the clipping of Mr Ouko's wings, accusing him of being used by politicians to fight opponents.

But Mr Munya said sending Mr Ouko home or reducing his powers would not help.

"The solution is not to remove him, but to help him make his work better. Taking away part of his mandate or replacing him will lead to loss of credibility in that office," he said.

NCKK Secretary Peter Karanja said corruption at national and county governments was depriving Kenyans services.

He said insecurity was a problem because of corruption which allowed foreigners to easily obtain Kenyan identification documents.

Uhuru tells off Raila and accuses him

Opposition leader, seated a few metres from President, was caught off-guard, but stood his ground

BY DENNIS ODUNGA
@dennis_odunga
dodunga@ke.nationmedia.com

President Uhuru Kenyatta yesterday accused Opposition leader Raila Odinga of being disrespectful, opposing the government for the sake of it and hampering the country's development.

In a dramatic escalation of the political fallout over trade agreements with Uganda, President Kenyatta faced Mr Odinga at a PanAfrican meeting in Nairobi and said: "Bwana Raila Odinga, let us work together. If you want to accuse me, do it and do so without taking me back. When you say that I went to talk about bringing cheap sugar into Kenya, which cheap sugar are you talking about?"

"I say that with due respect and humility to my elder brother. Tomorrow, you would be here (President) and you will expect respect. We can't criticise each other for the sake of criticising each other," Mr Kenyatta, clearly irritated, added.

He and Mr Odinga were attending the eastern Africa region Pan African Congress at the Kenyatta International Convention Centre (KICC).

But speaking immediately after the President left, Mr Odinga stood his ground, maintaining that farmers and sugar companies stood to suffer losses if the trade deal was implemented.

"I will not be against Kenya trading with Uganda. I am not against it. All I am saying is that we have to protect Kenyan sugarcane farmers," he said.

On Tuesday, Mr Odinga strongly criticised Mr Kenyatta for what he said was sacrificing the national interest to benefit unnamed individuals for agreeing a deal with Uganda allowing the importation of sugar from Uganda in exchange for the export of Kenyan meat and milk.

Uganda, which buys a lot of Kenyan products, is touchy about Kenya's import restrictions. Kenya is suspicious that a lot of Ugandan sugar is actually imported, and not even by Ugandans but by crooked Kenyan businessmen.

Yesterday, in a harsh face-to-face rejoinder to Mr Odinga's criticism — who termed the trade deals as reckless and certain to hurt Kenyan farmers and firms — President Kenyatta said the government was ready for constructive criticism as opposed to personal attacks meant to derail development.

He said it was improper for Mr Odinga to claim that the trade pact would flood the Kenyan market, which is facing shortage of the sweetener, with cheap sugar imports, yet Uganda was a significant trading partner as it imports a lot of products from Kenya.

Under the Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa countries and the East Africa protocol, Kenya is obliged to allow products from the region into its market.

The only condition is that the products must originate from member countries and not imported from outside and packaged in member countries under what is known as the rules of origin.

The President told Mr Odinga that it is better to import sugar from Uganda than go for it from Brazil and other countries.

The off-the-cuff message apparently caught Mr Odinga, who was seated few metres away, off-guard. Mr Kenyatta said Uganda was the leading export market for Kenyan produce and any imports from the country would only improve trade between the two nations.

"Let us work to strengthen our own in this region. Uganda imports $700 million (Sh70 billion) worth of products from Kenya. They export $150 million (Sh15 billion)," the President said.

He said Mr Odinga was taking the country back by his frequent antagonism of a legitimately elected government and warned such destructive of disrespect over Uganda trade deals politics risked undermining the country's economic gains.

President Kenyatta said the former Prime Minister's criticism of the economic partnership between the two countries was not justified as Kenyan farmers also stood to benefit as they would export beef and other products to Uganda.

"Let us see how we can strengthen our own farmers. We must look big and think big for our people," Mr Kenyatta said after reading his written speech to the delegates from the Eastern Africa countries.

The President extended an olive branch to Mr Odinga, saying he was ready to work with him to improve the lives of Kenyans.

Read resolutions

He spoke after the chairman the Pan African Congress, Maj-Gen (Rtd) Kahinda Otafiire of Uganda, read resolutions of the congress, which included calls to improve the free flow of people and trade between African countries.

Mr Odinga argued that there were no mechanisms to protect Kenya from dumping of cheap sugar from other countries.

He said he was not opposed to intra-Africa trade and that he supports removal of trade barriers to enable countries engage in meaningful trade.

But he argued that the government must first deal with effects of corruption that would see cartels take advantage of the importation agreement to trade in cheap sugar imports and suffocate local millers.

Cabinet Secretaries insist no deal allowing sugar dumping was signed, saying Kampala and Nairobi discussed trade

BY PETER LEFTIE
pmutibo@ke.nationmedia.com

The government yesterday hit out at Cord leader Raila Odinga over his claims that it entered into a trade agreement with Uganda that allows cheap sugar to be dumped in Kenya.

Cabinet Secretaries Amina Mohamed (Foreign Affairs) and Henry Rotich (Treasury) maintained that no trade agreements were signed during President Kenyatta's recent three-day State visit to Uganda.

"There was no agreement signed during the visit by President Kenyatta. If there were any agreements, they must have been signed by entities outside the two governments," said Ms Mohamed.

Addressing a press conference purposely called to respond to Mr Odinga's claims, the two Cabinet Secretaries insisted that leaders discussed ways of removing non-tariff barriers between the two countries to ease trade in sugar.

"Our ministers have been all over the region ensuring that we have safeguards protecting the country from sugar dumping. Those safeguards have not been removed," Ms Mohamed explained.

Mr Odinga had expressed fears that an agreement on sugar importation would kill the local sugar industry.

"This deal on sugar is sour. It comes at a time when Kenya's leading sugar manufacturer, Mumias, is struggling to get back on its feet. Sugarcane farmers across the country are equally struggling," Mr Odinga said in a statement issued in Nairobi on Tuesday.

He added: "Equally tasteless is the deal on beef and dairy products. We doubt that New KCC and the Kenya Meat Commission currently have the capacity to export dairy and beef to Uganda. It is, therefore, unclear who this deal is meant to benefit in Kenya."

A joint communique released by the Uganda Government did, however, not make any reference to agreements on sugar, dairy and beef products. It only stated that both countries had agreed to develop the cheapest route for transporting crude oil between the two countries.

At a business forum attended by the two presidents in Kampala, Ms Mohamed had made reference to sugar concessions when she said that Kenya was ready to fast track the issuance of permits to Ugandan traders to export its surplus sugar to the Kenyan market.

Speaking yesterday, Ms Mohamed revisited the subject, saying the two countries are considering forming a joint body to manage the sugar sector in order to check the dumping of the commodity in either country.

Ms Mohamed and Mr Rotich maintained that Kenya would only import sugar from the Comesa member countries, Uganda included, to bridge a sugar deficit whenever it occurs.

Why sugar traders got the nod

BY NATION REPORTER

At a meeting held at Kampala Serena on Sunday, Ugandan officials and sugar industry players from the private sector complained that Kenya was blocking access to its lucrative sugar market.

Foreign Affairs Cabinet Secretary Amin Mohamed, who led the Kenya Government delegation to the meeting, blamed the situation on changes in the sector.

She said the Kenya Sugar Board had morphed into a new agricultural organisation — the Agriculture, Fisheries and Food Authority.

"There was a technical problem in the processing of permits but I would want to assure the Ugandan Government and the private sector that the issue has been dealt with.

"We will meet in Nairobi in the coming days to lay down long-term solutions so that this problem does not recur," she told the audience mainly from the Uganda Manufacturers Association.

It was not the first time the lobby group was voicing concern. Ugandans had previously complained that despite the East African Community Common Market Protocol, Kenya is not allowing Ugandan sugar into its territory.

Kenya exports about $700 million (Sh70 billion) worth of goods to Uganda, but it buys only Sh18 billion from the same country.

Cost of goods in shillings that Kenya exports to its biggest trading partner Uganda.

Last year, Ugandan traders petitioned their government to impose similar restrictions in the name of balance of trade. The traders charged that Uganda should start doing more business at the Port of Dar es Salaam than Mombasa until Nairobi behaves.

So, when President Uhuru Kenyatta was in Uganda for a three-day State visit early this week, he was under pressure to respond to the criticism.

"Kenya and Uganda as each other's leading trade and investment partners are at the heart of this integration," he told the Ugandan Parliament on Monday.

"We understand that the only way to catch up with the 'Asian Tigers' is to produce more goods and services that are globally competitive, to trade more regionally, and to access exponentially greater amounts of investment," he said.

Ms Mohamed had earlier told the Ugandans that Kenya would grant traders permits to start exporting sugar.

But what is the situation? Kenya and Uganda belong to the East African Community, so do Tanzania, Rwanda and Burundi.

In July 2010, the community enforced the Common Markets Protocol after all the members ratified it.

The protocol allows four "freedoms" namely free movement of goods, labour; services; and capital, to boost trade and investments, but provides certain barriers.

Despite Kenya producing nearly 210,000 tonnes of sugar less than the national demand (860,000), the country's policy is to protect local millers until they are able to compete.

Kenya to lift ban on biotech foods

Deputy president Ruto says growing of maize and cotton is set to start soon

BY SAMUEL KARANJA
@Wachegel
Schege@ke.nationmedia.com

A ban on importing and eating genetically modified food will be lifted in a month or two.

At the same time, Deputy President William Ruto said yesterday, genetically modified maize and cotton will soon be cultivated. "Kenya will not be left behind in biotechnology," he said.

The announcement is likely to spark fierce debate on consumption of biotech foods, which has been resisted by civil society groups who say its safety is not guaranteed.

The Kenya Biodiversity Coalition comprising 60 groups has been most vocal in its resistance, saying the government has not acquired sufficient information proving that the foods are not a danger to public health.

Addressing researchers yesterday during the 4th National Biosafety Conference at the Kenya School of Monetary Studies in Nairobi, Mr Ruto said discussions to lift the ban had been concluded and that the government would support scientists in research.

"The government appreciates the great contribution of technology. We are going to lift the ban on genetically modified organisms shortly after the Cabinet makes a final decision," he said.

"In a month or two, we shall be able to do that" he said.

He urged scientists to start a vigorous campaign to allay fears among Kenyans over the use of genetically modified foods.

The DP said the National Biosafety Authority had received applications for open field cultivation of genetically modified maize and cotton and was now receiving views from the public on it.

"The ministries concerned with biosafety have agreed that biotechnology is the way to the future as long as we have regulations in place," he said.

"We cannot be left behind when the world is discussing biotechnology," said Mr Ruto.

Researchers and academics have been pressing the government to lift the ban.

The ban was imposed in 2012 after French scientists associated the eating of genetically modified maize with tumours in rats.

Kenya then prohibited the importation and eating of the foods. Subsequent research found the study to be flawed and it was withdrawn.

Judge injured as his car collides with another

Justice David Majanja (above) was injured when his official car was involved in a head-on collision. The accident occurred on Monday near the Arujo bridge black spot on the Homa Bay-Rongo road. The judge was on his way to work when his car collided with another, leaving him with injuries. He was taken to St Paul's Hospital in Homa Bay for First Aid and then on to Nairobi for further treatment. The official car's bonnet was extensively damaged and was towed to Homa Bay Police Station. The driver of the other car was arrested and is to be tried in Kisii.

Lang'ata tear gas teacher defended

BY NATION REPORTER

Lobby groups have criticised the Ombudsman for recommending that the headteacher of Lang'ata Road primary school be disciplined over the tear-gassing of pupils by police in January.

The pupils were protesting against the grabbing of their playground by a private developer on January 19.

A report by the Commission on Administrative Justice said the head teacher did not take measures to protect the children when police lobbed tear gas canisters in a confrontation with protesters.

But yesterday, seven education and children rights groups disagreed with the Ombudsman saying the headteacher, Mr Peter Mugo(right), was not at fault.

"The organisations take exception to a recommendation that the Teachers Service Commission issue a warning letter to Mr Peter Mugo for professional misconduct," they said in a joint statement.

The organisations, which include Elimu Yetu Coalition, Girl Child Network, Society for International Development and Kenya Alliance for Advancement of Children, backed the proposal that police involved in the incident be punished.

Police on the spot

"The headteacher did not force the children to demonstrate, neither did he stop them from sheltering in classrooms after the police attacked them with teargas," the joint statement added in support of the headteacher.

The lobbies said disciplinary action should be taken against the Nairobi police commander Benson Kibui and his officers.

The report also named Kajiado North AP boss Inspector Leonard Chea Mayaya and recommended that he be reprimanded for dereliction in the performance of duty.

Defectors get a second chance

Committee resolves to allow party rebels to rejoin the Orange outfit without conditions

BY SAMWEL BORN MAINA

ODM yesterday declared a blanket amnesty to leaders who had ditched the party in the General Election as started its "gather all and scatter none" campaign.

In a move aimed at revamping the party, ODM leader Raila Odinga on Tuesday chaired the central management committee where it was resolved that defectors be allowed to rejoin the party without conditions.

National Elections Board chairwoman Judith Pareno, however, said party hoppers would be required to write to the Registrar of Political Parties to relinquish their current party affiliations.

Members willing to return have been asked to take part in the grassroots elections later this month.

In what it calls the "gather all and scatter none" campaign, ODM is planning to attract more members to the party in a bid to dethrone the Jubilee Coalition in the 2017 General Election.

"In the spirit of 'gather all and scatter none', former party members who contested seats on other party tickets and have been invited to pick up application forms and go through the vetting by the board," Ms Pareno said in a statement.

The grassroots elections for seven counties would be held at the end of this month and early September. Members have been asked pick up application forms before August 20.

The second and third grassroots elections will be held in October and November.

To woo more members, the central management committee waived the Sh200 fee for members at the polling station level be waived.

"However, anyone willing to pay this amount, does it on voluntary basis as a way of supporting the party. However, those interested in positions from ward level upwards must pay the fees," Ms Pareno said.

Meanwhile, ODM party leaders will meet this Sunday to take stock of their performance.

They will meet at the Manzoni lodge in Machakos County to discuss the party's future and weigh its strengths

County staff set to get benefits plan

BY NATION REPORTER

A Bill proposing a mandatory retirement scheme for county government employees has been presented to the Senate.

The Bill is an improvement on an initial one that had been proposed to transition the former local authorities and national government employees.

The Transition Authority drafted the new Bill after Senate Majority Leader Kindiki Kithure withdrew the County Retirement Scheme Bill two months ago.

Few amendments

"The stakeholders recommended a few amendments to the Bill, which still requires a lot of consultation because there are sections that need to be harmonised," TA Chairman Kinuthia Wamwangi said when he presented the draft to the chairman of the Senate Labour Committee, Mr Steward Mwandzayo.

The Bill provides for the winding up of all existing schemes and the transfer of accrued benefits to a universal scheme.

"The Retirement Benefits Authority suggested that existing schemes be liquidated if they achieved 100 per cent funding to ease the transition," Mr Wamwangi said.

ELECTORAL REFORMS | Commission wants party members' lists submitted 120 days before polls

Agency seeks strict party poll rules

Proposed changes in elections conduct are aimed at preventing chaotic nominations

BY JOHN NJAGI
@johnnjagi2
ijnjagi@ke.nationmedia.com

The electoral commission has proposed stricter party nomination rules in the 2017 general election.

This is aimed at entrenching discipline in political parties to avoid a repeat of the chaotic nominations that preceded the 2013 General Election.

The electoral agency Chairman Issack Hassan said the changes in the conduct of elections would align the process to the Constitution.

The changes were prepared by electoral officials, the parliamentary Justice and Legal Affairs Committee and other stakeholders at a retreat in Mombasa.

Yesterday, Mr Hassan presented the draft to the committee. Some changes were welcomed, while others were resisted.

It has been proposed that political parties extend the deadline for submitting their nomination lists from 45 days to 90 days to allow dispute resolution and to give courts more time to work on losers' cases.

Mr Hassan said some of the changes would be anchored in the law to ensure uniformity and compel parties to conform. There will be penalties for parties which defy the rules.

"This will end the mischief

THE PROCESS

Bill will drafted and debated

1 Views of members of the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee, the Attorney-General, the Gender Commission and Registrar of Political parties are incorporated.

2 The proposals were forwarded to the Kenya Law Reform Commission to prepare a draft Bill.

3 Bill may be adopted by the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee as its own, and tabled in the National Assembly for debate.

4 Committee said the Bill should be ready before the 2017 elections, so as to align the drive to the new regulations.

submit party nomination rules six months to the elections, to allow the electoral commission to check if they conform to the Constitution.

Parties would not be allowed to make changes to rules 90 days to the elections.

There is a proposal to stop continuous voter registration during referendums and by-elections.

Mr Hassan told the committee the commission proposes that the period of opening the voters' register for inspection be reverted back to 90 days instead of the current 60.

He also said there was a proposal to extended the nomination of candidates for by-elections from 45 to 55 days.

by some parties, which present nomination lists very close to the elections. This causes a setback in case someone goes to court to dispute the list," he said.

Legal Affairs Committee Chairman Samuel Chepkong'a said the requirement that parties submit lists of members 120 days before the polls would allow the poll agency to scrutinise them.

Cooked lists

This, he said, would prevent cases where members lists are cooked ahead of the polls.

The Ainabkoi MP said he has been a victim as he was registered by a party which he did not belong to in the run-up to the last polls.

He said it appears some parties stole records of mobile phone subscribers and presented to the commission as genuine members.

Under the proposed changes, parties would also be required to

Don't halt Ngilu's trial, judge told

BY NATION CORRESPONDENT

A court has been asked to reject a request seeking to halt the trial of suspended Lands Cabinet Secretary Charity Ngilu and eight others over the Sh8 billion Karen land dispute. The Director of Public Prosecutions, the anti-corruption commission and Muchanga Investments Ltd told the Environment and Land Court in Nairobi that it had no mandate to entertain the request.

The application was lodged by Mrs Ngilu and her co-accused, Mr Jos Konzolo, who owns a company known as Telesource Com Ltd.

The firm and Muchanga Investments both claim ownership of the Karen land.

A special court

"The land commission is a special court established under the Constitution of Kenya to handle environment and land disputes only," says an objection filed by Muchanga Investments yesterday.

The former CS and her co-accused are on trial at a magistrate's court after they were charged with offences relating to the land. The hearing of the case is scheduled from November 2 to 4.

Mrs Ngilu and her co-accused asked the land court to suspend the criminal case. They argued that an ownership dispute over the land was pending at the High Court, hence the other case before a magistrate should not go on until the owner of the property is determined. They also argue that the Attorney-General is defending Mrs Ngilu in the civil matter yet the DPP had opted to prosecute her. The hearing of the application will be on September 3.

This will end the mischief by some parties, which present nomination lists very close to the election. This causes a setback in case someone goes to court to dispute the list”

Issack Hassan

Panic as teachers dig in over strike

Union summons members to endorse boycott as House team pleads for time to end impasse

BY OUMA WANZALA
owanzala@ke.nationmedia.com

Frantic efforts were being made yesterday to avert a looming teachers' strike as the union summoned its members to endorse the action.

National Assembly Education Committee Chairperson Sabina Chege pleaded with the Kenya National Union of Teachers to delay the boycott for two weeks.

"We must explore all avenues and we need two weeks to talk with the National Treasury, Education ministry, Teachers Service Commission and the Budget Committee," said Ms Chege.

The commission needs Sh17 billion to increase salaries for the 288,060 teachers, backdated to July 2013.

Knut secretary-general Wilson Sossion told the committee that teachers had run out of patience and the National Executive Council will meet tomorrow to endorse the strike.

"We want to make it clear that teachers will not report to school in September," he said.

Last week the teachers' employer moved to the Supreme Court seeking to hold up the 50-60 per cent increase awarded by the Labour Court and upheld by Court of Appeal.

Yesterday, Mr Sossion told the committee that irrespective of today's decision by the Supreme Court, teachers will go on strike unless the increase is reflected in the August payslip.

Mr Sossion was with chairman Mudzo Nzili, treasurer John Matiangi and deputy secretary-general Hesbon Otieno.

GRIEVANCES

Biased decisions

Knut boss Wilson Sossion said besides the disputed pay raise, teachers suffered other injustices.

He said, for instance, the salaries commission had approved a pay rise for Teachers Service Commission staff yet it was insisting on a job evaluation for teachers.

"A qualified P1 teacher earns Sh16,690 while a TSC clerk earns Sh35,000," he said.

Ms Chege expressed disquiet over what she said were the double standards of the salaries team after it came to light that a clerical officer at the commission earns more than a P1 teacher.

However, she said: "We do not need to paralyse learning and interfere with examinations."

She accused the Teachers

Service Commission of failing to honour court orders such as the retired teacher's case which has been dragging since 1997.

Matayos MP Godfrey Odanga also accused the commission of dashing from one court to another without asking Parliament and the National Treasury.

Mr Odanga said teachers deserve better pay.

Mr Sossion told the MPs that teachers should now be enjoying a 68 per cent salary increase.

"We are already two years late in signing a collective bargaining agreement, which is unconstitutional. We have been patient since 2013 and we will not accept anything less," said Mr Sossion.

Firm sues county over park charges

BY NATION REPORTER

A Tanzania and Kenya-based tourist lodge has gone to court to protest multiple park entry fees at Maasai Mara Game Reserve.

Maasai Mara (Sopa) Limited yesterday said the Narok County government was wrong to impose higher and multiple park entry fees on visitors to the reserve from its lodges.

The firm wants the High Court to quash the law that requires visitors to the reserve pay the fee every time they re-enter the park.

Discrimination

Director of Operations at Maasai Mara Sopa Lodge Kennedy Ayoti said it was a requirement for tourists to pay entry fees to the county government.

He added that the devolved government had imposed high park entry fees on people touring the reserve from lodges outside the park while charging a lower fee for those inside the reserve.

He said the law was discriminatory.

Mr Ayoti added that the requirement had affected their business.

"Tourists avoid our lodges due to the charges," Mr Ayoti said.

The payment legislation was reviewed through a gazette notice first issued by the defunct Narok County Council and took effect on March 1, 2011.

Mr Ayoti said the lodge was a recognised brand and had built its commercial goodwill for 29 years.

He said communities and the county government benefited from Sopa lodge.

The case will be heard on August 20.

MP's vehicle seized in drug haul drama

BY NATION CORRESPONDENT

A vehicle belonging to an MP was yesterday impounded by police after it was found carrying 390 rolls of bhang and 24 sachets of heroine.

The drugs were reportedly being ferried to Lamu from Mombasa.

The truck belonging to Lamu West MP Julius Ndegwa was impounded at Witu Road block yesterday morning.

"We have impounded a Mitsubishi Canter which had three people. The occupants were the driver, a loader and a passenger suspected to be the owner of the narcotics," said a police officer, who requested not to be identified because he is not authorised to speak to the media.

The three are being held at the Mpeketoni Police Station as they await to be charged at a mobile court today.

Mr Ndegwa told the Nation that he was the owner of the vehicle and expressed shock that it was used to carry contraband goods.

"That is my vehicle and I am really shocked to hear that bhang and heroin was inside the vehicle. My vehicle carries only legal goods."

"I congratulate the Lamu police for their efforts in ensuring that they fight the vice. I call on the prosecution to charge the three since they want to spoil my image," said the MP.

He went on: "They should face the law. I don't deal with such kind of people and I am not part of them."

Radio, TV stations to air 60pc local music

CS Wario launches policy expected to streamline the music industry

BY JOSEPHINE MOSONGO
jmosongo@ke.nationmedia.com

It will now be mandatory for public and private broadcasters to dedicate 60 per cent of their music content to local artistes.

This follows the launch of the National Music Policy by Sports, Culture and the Arts Cabinet Secretary Hassan Wario.

Many musicians said this would ensure that Kenyans listen to and watch music by local artistes instead of foreigners.

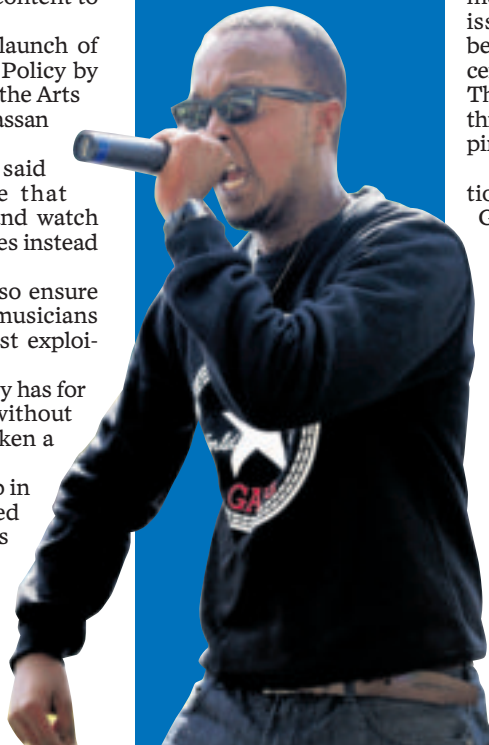

The policy will also ensure that the rights of musicians are protected against exploitation.

The music industry has for a long time been without policy, which has taken a decade to develop.

A task force set up in August 2006 studied music from various countries and drew up the policy.

The policy is just a framework, which has not become a law. Dr Wario said yesterday the policy had taken

“We have a legal document that recognises all the issues that artistes face,” Wyre

too long to formulate due to lack of funds.

With the policy in place, he said, the music Bill would be easier to draft.

“Registered musicians will also be able to resolve disputes and compile their complaints through the National Music Tribunal,” he added.

Dancehall and reggae star Wyre said the policy could not have been launched at a better time.

“We now have a legal document that recognises all the issues artistes face. We have been fighting for a larger percentage of airplay in the media. The new policy has addressed this and there are steps to curb piracy,” said the artiste.

Media Owners Association Chairman Hannington Gaya said media houses had always been supportive of local music content, even though, they were not involved in the formulation of the policy.

“We, however, insist that it should not be mandatory to dedicate 60 per cent of our music content to local artistes. Our position is that local music should be of good quality and authentic, not something duplicated from the West.

“That is the only way to drive local content. Only one association should represent musicians and not four, which only harass media houses for royalties,” he said.

Explain the deals with Uganda to the public

The exchanges between President Uhuru Kenyatta and Cord leader Raila Odinga over the deals struck between Kenya and Uganda at the weekend underscores the essence of open communication on matters that affect the public.

Kenya apparently was allowed to export milk and beef products to Uganda, and in turn accept import of Ugandan sugar as part of attempts to balance trade between the two neighbouring countries.

However, Mr Odinga took exception to the deals, terming them secretive, and argued that Kenya stood to lose particularly in regard to sugar imports that threatened to undermine local production.

Part of the unstated grouse was that some of the deals are seen to favour the commercial interests of some senior politicians, and therefore raise questions as to whether personal, rather than national, interests were at play.

Matters were not made any better by the bungled communication from the government. Whereas President Kenyatta declared that nothing was wrong with importing sugar from Uganda, rather than Brazil, to plug shortfalls, Foreign Affairs Cabinet Secretary Amina Mohamed appeared to deny that any deal was struck.

Such dichotomy adds fuel to the suspicion and depicts the government in bad light. Importing sugar to seal the deficit and from a neighbour is not sinister in any way.

However, at a time when local sugar production is struggling, there might be grounds for suspicion, especially when details are not forthcoming.

There is also fear that the deal would allow Kenyas infamous sugar barons to bring in sugar from elsewhere and sell it as Ugandan product. The government should explain clearly the terms of the deal to assure the public there was nothing sinister.

Deliver to avoid the axe

It is quite understandable that governors are seeking specific measures to shield them from being kicked out of office. There are several examples where MCAs have ganged up and voted out governors following trivial disagreements.

Governors may, therefore, feel vulnerable and at the mercy of the MCAs, who could easily rebel in pursuit of individual interests.

It is, therefore, instructive that the governors, who met Deputy President William Ruto on Tuesday to discuss public finance management legislation and procurement, also sought to secure themselves.

They want a constitutional interpretation by the Supreme Court on the thresholds for impeachment of elected officials.

This is, of course, a step in the right direction, as it can help to prevent witch-hunting and ensure that any grievances against governors go through due process.

Impeachment is a tool that should only be used as a last resort to prevent excesses and ensure transparent and efficient management.

However, the best insurance for governors is to carry out their duties diligently, strictly following the constitutional provisions that outline their roles.

WHAT OTHERS SAY | Charles Onyango-Obbo

What the Museveni-Kenyatta trade deal tells us about Uganda and Kenya

Now there is this small argument between President Kenyatta and opposition Cord leader Raila Odinga about, of all things, Ugandan sugar. Kenyatta says it makes business sense to import Ugandan sugar, because Uganda is reciprocating and will import dairy and beef products from Kenya, as per the trade pact he just signed with President Yoweri Museveni in Kampala. That is better than importing sugar from Brazil, which is not buying Kenyan goods in return, and Uganda is, after all, a fellow member of the East African Community.

Raila's concern is that this will result in cheap sugar being dumped into the Kenyan market, and cane farmers will suffer. His position, though, is understandable, because the stronghold of his Cord is in the sugar-growing areas, and he is doing the right thing by them. But as an East Africanist, I am with Kenyatta on this one. First of all, just like not every country needs to make its own cars or aeroplanes, not every country needs to produce its own sugar – even if they could do it more inefficiently than Kenya's. Thus, airlines in the Middle East and Asia, which don't make aircraft, are using American and European planes to run more successful airlines than European and US carriers. But sugar is also a metaphor for some of the surprising differences between Uganda and Kenya.

If you came of age in the 1980s, there were only three "capitalist" countries in Africa: South Africa, Malawi, and Kenya.

However, South Africa was an apartheid state, and Malawi was a tiny economy ruled by a strange old dictator who wore bowler hats called Hastings Kamuzu Banda.

The rest of Africa professed some version of socialism. The popular view then was that Kenya was alone out there as a capitalist economy.

In the late 1980s, something changed in this region.

Uganda embarked on one of the most extreme privatisation and economic liberalisation programmes the continent, some claim the world, had ever seen.

A Ugandan born in the 1990s cannot understand how a government firm can grow sugarcane”

A chunk of the army was sent home; the civil service was virtually dismantled; the cooperative movement and its bank were dissolved; everything was put on the table. It hurt a lot, but perhaps, in the end, it was for the better.

The result is that unlike Kenya today, there is no acre of land farmed in Uganda by a company or parastatal in which the government has a stake. There is no state control of any farm prices, nor does it even own a garage where it keeps a bag of maize the way Kenya's National Cereals and Produce Board does.

All that is in the hands of private business. Thus a Ugandan born in the 1990s simply has no context for understanding that a government-owned company can grow sugarcane. This spreads the risks differently, and affects the politics. Thus for Museveni, unlike a leader in Kenya, he does not have to worry about thousands of people who grow or work in sugar cane. He only has to deal with the chiefs in sugar companies – and they are two big private ones. At that level, it is easier to sort them out with policy and tax breaks if need be. They can worry about the outgrowers.

But in the specific deal Museveni inked with Kenyatta, the two men stand on interesting ends of the trade stick.

Museveni is one of, if not the largest, cattle owners in Uganda and boasts about how he makes a fortune selling beef and milk. Kenyatta's family controls over 50 per cent of the milk industry in Kenya.

By inking that deal, he is happily allowing Kenyatta to come in and take away his market share. The equivalent of that would be if Raila were a sugarcane farmer, but he loudly supported the deal to give Ugandan sugar free access to the Kenyan market.

These differences in how the two countries have reorganised their public and private sectors was all too evident in April when Kenyatta announced the very long list of appointments to parastatals. It was a whole book, and when I studied it, there were more parastatal top positions in Kenya than there are in the whole of the Uganda government.

The point being that in East Africa today, Uganda is the true capitalist economy. Kenya, with its humongous parastatal sector, is like an enlightened communist state. How did this happen?

NATION OF DEGENERATES? | Duncan Omanga

Obsession with sex and social media voyeurism an affront to our women

In the past week, two events have painted the picture of a culture saturated and depraved by uncontrollable sexuality and voyeurism.

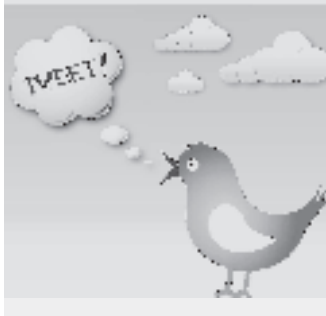

Most of it is derived from and circulated on social media. In one incident, a group of students taking a bus home for holidays are arrested after a public tip-off suggests excessive indulgence “on wheels”.

The subsequent arrest of the passengers and its crew is largely lawful, until a rogue cop undresses the girls, captures the scene using a handheld device, and uploads the contents onto cyberspace. Then off it goes, viral.

In the second incident, a moment of sexual aggression and a despicable act of what some scholars call “abjection”, an unidentified man audio-tapes a session in which he is clearly violating a woman who sounds either drugged or intoxicated. Impressed by his achievements, “Mollis”, too, uploads the heinous contents of his sins online for posterity to take note.

At the risk of being labelled a right-wing moralist, these incidents suggest that not only is our public discourse drenched in sexual innuendo, but we are increasingly becoming a nation of chronic social media voyeurs and abusers of women.

For starters, Kenya’s place

The universal symbol for Twitter: Kenyans misusing social media in cyber-activism and social media in Africa is unmatched. Our Twitter traffic is among the highest in Africa and possibly the most proactive in the continent. Besides, Kenyans on Twitter represent one of the most powerful “online lobbies”, especially when the reputation of the country is defamed.

Indeed, in between these two embarrassing incidences, a locally organised online campaign raised over Sh6 million in just hours to help university student Jadudi fight a brain tumour.

However, all these progressive efforts are overshadowed by our objectification of women through our “chronicle” social media voyeurism.

Voyeurism refers to the sexual interest in or practice of spying on people who are naked or who are engaged in sex or other actions considered private. For media scholars, voyeurism includes sexuality but goes further to subsume the consumption of revealing images of and information about other’s apparently real and unguarded lives, often through social media, and at the expense of their privacy.

The visual parading of the schoolgirl was not just a violation of her privacy but also an indictment of the extremes of our voyeurism. The trauma suffered by the victims is unimaginable.

But this was not the first time such a thing has happened. From the gory images of victims of Westgate and Garissa to the rape and killing of a young university student, Kenyans have been too quick to share images and episodes of “abjection”.

The recording of the rape act and the media excitement it elicited, both in prime-time news and FM radio stations attests to this fact. Media discourse shifted away from the act of violation and moved to “male-dominated” conversations of “machismo” and a glorification of masculine sexual conquest.

But in our excitement, we forgot some extremely important facts. Behind these images and audio recordings are real people, with lives to live, people with personal dignity, family, sisters to someone, a daughter of one of us, and more importantly are members of a community.

When we share images and content that shame others, whether dead or alive, we turn them into an object, and thus deny them their actual space in human relations and in a sense, become participants in their violation. When we share images of terror victims we not only help finish the job terrorists began but we become a conduit to their overall aim.

In the same manner, when we circulate the haunting “sounds” of a rape victim, or the exposure of a teenage girl’s nakedness, we become indirect co-perpetrators in the act.

Further, the circulation of such “lurid” content on FM radio and prime-time news gives such acts legitimacy, especially when it is glorified. In addition, democracy and the development of a critical rational debate are undermined when public discourse is reduced to needless discussions of sexuality and masculine gratification.

CITY STINKING. Nairobi is becoming one large slum while Governor Evans Kidero and company try to blame everyone else but themselves for their poor performance, remarks Nyokabi Kangoro. “There is no order, illegal car wash bays and food sellers are almost on every road and at every matatu terminus. There are heaps of uncollected garbage in the residential estates and markets and no dustbins. The waste removed from drains is left uncollected. Wake up, Governor and smell the stench in your county! You must do better.” Her contact is nyokabi.kangoro@gmail.com.

HEAR US, SAFARICOM. For two years now, Purity Mwangi and her neighbours have been appealing in vain to Safaricom to improve its network coverage of their neighbourhood in Kahawa Sukari, near Kenyatta University, on Nairobi’s northwestern outskirts. Purity is particularly following up on a pledge the mobile phone service provider made in 2013, in response to a complaint to Watchman. “In fact, their signal has become worse, but I will not tire asking.” Her contact is wanjiru pk2006@yahoo.com.

HELP US, DR CHUMO. Praising Kenya Power CEO Ben Chumo for doing a good job by giving quick feedback to customers whenever they have problems, David Jasondu hopes that he will go to the rescue of the people of Kisumu County by sorting out the frequent power outages in Ndori Village of Upper Nyakach. “For the past three months, the power supply has been quite erratic and residents are almost giving up as their complaints never yield results. Dr Chumo, please, unleash the magic so we can have constant power supply,” he pleads.

WE NEED ANSWERS. The plea by one reader to critics to leave the mega loss-making Kenya Airways alone simply does not make sense because, apart from the individual shareholders, the government holds a stake in the airline on behalf of taxpayers, says Churchill Amatha. He adds: “We have every right to question the performance of the national carrier. And, of course, the same government is now being asked to bail out the airline. We need those answers and pretty fast.” His contact is amatha@hotmail.co.uk.

MYSTERIOUS BLACK BOOKS. Traffic police on duty on the roads, Ethans Githinji notes, always carry small black notebooks in their hands or in little bags, but from his observation of their conduct, he has concluded that the real purpose is quite different from what might have been intended. According to Ethans, the notebook “comes in quite handy when one receives a bribe as the currency note is cleverly thrust between the pages. “I have also noted that they never write anything in those notebooks.”

PRINCES OF THE CHURCH. Declaring at the outset that it is not out of envy, X.N. Iraki wonders how come “preachers drive only the top-of-the-range cars while their flock walk”. He poses: “Shouldn’t the pastors be driving the smallest cars in the market such as the Vitz? While missionaries built schools and hospitals, we are yet to see the current crop of preachers doing the same. I think I need to start a church as it seems more lucrative than any other enterprises, with no risks, except maybe road accidents.”

Biotechnology can ensure food security

Maize, the most important staple foods, is failing. Productivity in Kenya of 1.6 tonnes per hectare is already well under the global average of 5.0 tonnes per hectare. Even more worrying is that production appears to be on a downward trend.

Unless these trends are reversed, and Kenya’s production can begin to increase again, the country’s food security is at risk.

In January last year, the government announced plans to import three million 90-kilogramme bags of maize to cater for shortfalls before the next harvest. If there is a shortfall and renewed drought, millions of Kenyans could again become dependent on food aid.

Currently, agriculture is the backbone of Kenya’s economy, contributing approximately 25 per cent of GDP, and employing 75 per cent of the national labour force. If it remains chronically inefficient, agriculture cannot modernise.

A lasting solution can only lie in the development and adoption of technologies that improve agricultural productivity.

Science and technology can help tackle challenges such as increasingly erratic weather conditions, including prolonged drought, which are exacerbated by climate change.

Modern technology can also help farmers improve yields and combat pests.

In Kenya, the damage the stem borer pest inflicts on maize crops is greater than nine billion shillings per year.

Stem borers reduce maize production by an average of 13 per cent or 400,000 tonnes of maize per year, though this can double during drought years or when proper measures are not taken to manage the pests.

The 400,000 tonnes of maize lost annually to stem borer damage is equivalent to Kenya’s normal imports.

In other words, if stem borer damage could be controlled, Kenya could become self-sufficient in maize.

For the past five years, the Kenya Agricultural and Livestock Research Organisation (KALRO), together with national and international research organisations through the Water Efficient Maize for Africa project, has been conducting trials on a GM maize that is resistant to stem borers.

This ‘Bt maize’ has the ability to protect itself from insect pests because it contains a gene derived from Bacillus thuringiensis (Bt), a bacteria that is naturally present in soil.

The Bt gene protects the plant from stem borers because it produces a protein that cannot be digested by the insects, but is harmless.

In addition, the maize reduces the need for frequent drenching with expensive chemicals that are harmful to humans and the environment.

Results from tests carried out in Kenya show that the WEMA Bt maize effectively controls stem borers without the need for insecticides. The even better news is that the varieties also recorded a yield increase of 3.7 tonnes per hectare above the best commercial hybrid used in the trials.

Following these impressive results, KALRO and the Africa Agricultural Technology Foundation made an application to the National Biosafety Authority (NBA) to approve cultivation of the WEMA Bt maize. The NBA has consequently invited the public to submit their comments on the application.

Bt maize will enhance food security for millions of farmers in Kenya by helping them protect their crop against stem borers without the use of insecticides.

This project is in accord with the second Medium Term Plan (2013-2017), which places a high priority on farmers using GM technologies. With the approval and introduction of Bt maize Kenya, we will be closer to achieving this goal.

Dr Kireger is the Director-General of KALRO

The Uganda sugar deal stinks to high heaven

President Uhuru Kenya and Uganda's President Museveni signed various deals meant to spur economic growth between the two countries. However, it would be prudent for the government to make the trade agreements public, so that Kenyans can position themselves to benefit. Making the matter public will also allow Kenyans to scrutinise whether the deals were meant to benefit a few or to promote genuine business.

Already, some Kenyans have started grumbling about the sugar deal, which was, indeed, ill-advised.

NJENGA SOLOMON, Nairobi

The signing of a treaty between Kenya and Uganda to allow Ugandan sugar into the country is really strange. This is a clear indication of how hypocritical our government is. Days after giving Mumias Sugar Factory Sh1billion for its revival, cheap imports from Uganda will paralyse its operations and those of other factories. The move will also cost us jobs. We have been taken for a ride.

JAMES OKOLA, Nairobi

It is apparent that one of the reasons that have led to the dire situation the sugar industry is facing is the flooding of cheap imports from other countries, especially from Brazil, by cartels run by powerful figures in government. The President may have opened the floodgates to more of these imports.

Besides, questions have been raised about whether Uganda's sugar meets the rules of origin. There are fears that the sugar from Uganda may be originating from other countries before it reaches Kenya.

VIVERE NANDIEMO, Kuria

Let's not start thinking about exporting our oil

Kenya imports about 80,000 barrels of crude every day, which amounts to 29,200,000 million barrels per year. This oil is worth $2.92 billion. Since we cannot produce that amount, there is no reason the oil we produce should initially be for export. There is also no good reason local production and refining has to begin in 2020. The only possible explanation is that private business interests have convinced the government to go that way, which is against the interests of its own people. We are headed the Nigeria way – an oil producer ending up importing oil products.

TALKING POINT

Engaging youth positively is the only way to forestall polls-related violence

The world watched as Kenya descended into anarchy after the disputed general elections of 2007. Tyres were set ablaze on roads, neighbours turned on neighbours, and very few people were safe anywhere in the country. Even those seeking refuge in churches were burnt.

But the most depressing moments was the image of young Kenyans flashed on screens worldwide. They were scenes of rogue youths wielding machetes, chanting war songs and gleefully carrying out the bloody wishes of politicians.

The continued lack of meaningful civic engagement of young people is a ticking time-bomb, and if the situation does not change, it will no longer be a question of if, but when, it will explode with devastating consequences.

On August 12, the United Nations International Youth Day was marked. This year's theme, "Youth Civic Engagement", couldn't have been more apt, especially in our circumstances.

Youth civic engagement is not a new concept. In fact the principle of youth participation in national affairs is one of the founding tenets of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. However, it has remained just that – a concept – and a mere blanket promising to cover young people at some future date instead of protecting them now, during the chilly nights.

For a long time, civic engagement of young people has just been a campaign tool, or a rhetorical construct uttered in speeches, or included in manifestos and declarations.

No real effort has been made to ensure that the critical voices of young people are not just heard, but their desires incorporated into development plans.

Engagement must not be mere tokenism; it must be meaningful. That is why capacity building must be the first process in ensuring that young people can participate fully in national affairs. But the young cannot do this alone, which is why the role of mentorships and other adult-youth relationships cannot be overstated.

As we march into the grand era of the highly ambitious Post-2015 Development Goals, young people must be accorded their space in the national effort. They must be engaged in the civic process. This shouldn't just be in terms of handouts in the name of special youth seats, but also improving on the on the environment that would allow more of them to get elected to political seats.

ROBERT ASEDA, Nairobi

Drama, poetry and music effective tools for promoting cohesion

The ongoing Kenya Schools and Colleges National Music Festival in Kisumu continues to amplify the fact that music and poetry will always remain effective tools for promoting national values and social cohesion.

The various performances, singing games, songs, and verses have sent strong messages on the need for people to promote national unity and values.

Furthermore, diverse communities are urged to live together in harmony irrespective of their differences, be they ethnic, religious, gender, racial or even generational.

Therefore, there is a need for everyone, especially the leadership within the two levels of government, to demonstrate value-based leadership, and also to facilitate the inculcation of principled governance as espoused in Article 10 of the Constitution.

Congratulations to our students and those who directed their performances for reminding us that in addition to our treasured diversity, we are still one country and we need one another for a prosperous and cohesive nation. We owe it to future generations.

Emails from correspondents

WOMEN RISING: The Global Entrepreneurship Summit saw many women in the business world turning up. Quite a number participated, coming up with wonderful innovations. But a closer look indicates that some communities still believe a woman's place is in the kitchen. Quite a number still want women to stay at home and look after children, instead of plying their full role in a changing world.

Women should be given opportunities to come up with innovations. If they are given the chance to lead, the nation will develop. They, too, should be more aggressive and take part in activities traditionally reserved for men.

EUPHRAZIER OGOT, Eldoret.

INVESTORS IN FLIGHT: With teachers, quarry workers and others avoiding northeastern Kenya over insecurity, something ought to be done. At this rate, everybody might soon shun the region, badly affecting the region's economy for generations to come. Investors from other regions have already taken off to other areas because every business needs a conducive environment to thrive. Let's come together and seek a long-term solution to the security lapses in the region.

PETER MUTAVA, LUANDA

AMBULANCES MISUSED: Three incidents that occurred recently have made me question the way ambulances are being used in the city. Last week, an ambulance hit and seriously injured a pedestrian. It had no stretcher and the casualty was unprofessionally handled.

Also last week, I saw another ambulance carrying food and vegetables. Then there are those that in the early morning or late evening stop at bus stages, seeking passengers. Traffic police should check if ambulances are being used for criminal activities.

JOE MUSYOKI, Kajiado

YOUTHS DEJECTED: Last year, young people who had qualified to join the "disciplined forces" were denied a chance. This caused great psychological damage to them. But those who bribed their way made it. Being recruited into any job, and especially in the forces, should be free and fair. These are people who are training to put their lives in danger for the country.

JAMES NYONGESA, Nairobi

YESTERDAY'S QUESTION:

Do you agree with Deputy President William Ruto that Kanu is dead?

VICTOR ABUKA: Kanu is still one of the richest parties in Kenya. Because most of the properties all over Kenya were grabbed when it was in power and some are still being grabbed as we speak, Kanu has the highest number of "diehard" supporters in the country.

DEREK ONYANGO: With a senator, an MP and several MCAs, Kanu is still visible despite being dormant.

NDWIGA KOBUTHI: Yes, Kanu was very powerful and would have ruled for many years but the power got into their heads and they lost touch with the citizenry, who had become educated and more informed. Kanu's tactics remained those of the 1970 and 1980s – intolerance of divergent views and opinions and ethnically driven, hence becoming irrelevant.

ALNASHIR D. WALJI: Kanu has "stalwarts" and a huge "following". It is a party to reckon with at the General Elections.

RUTH GITUMA: Kanu indeed died when President Moi left office, but it was reincarnated again under Jubilee in 2013 when its best students took office.

Cohesion agency is broke, says Kaparo

National Treasury gave commission only a fraction of its request, says chair

BY LILLIAN MUTAVI

Lmutavi@ke.nationmedia.com

The National cohesion team is broke, chairman, Mr Francis ole Kaparo says.

He says it is unable to do its work because it does not have money.

Mr Kaparo spoke during a workshop in Nairobi yesterday and said that the commission was given Sh300 million but that was not enough.

Still too little

"We had asked for Sh738 million and the government approved only Sh130 million. However, the Cabinet Secretary and the parliamentary committee on security ensured we got Sh311 million, which is still too little for the job we are required to do."

The workshop examined

311m

Shillings the cohesion commission received from Treasury, according to chairman Francis ole Kaparo (below) the role of the church in peace building and was organised by the commission and the Evangelical Alliance of Kenya.

The agency's work was risky and hence its workers ought to be paid well, he added.

Because it has no money, he said, the commission was working with various organisations to promote peace.

"The reason we are working with religious leaders is because they have many followers and reach more people." Mr Kaparo condemned religious leaders who have been in the headlines for the wrong reasons and asked them to carry their own cross.

"We have had a few complaints on religious leaders but it's not the whole lot so those breaking the law should be dealt with individually," he said.

Accused the media

He also accused the media of blowing claims against a pastor out of proportion.

James Ng'ang'a, a Nairobi pastor, has been under investigation over an accident that caused a woman's death.

He had also been at the centre of allegations of a cover-up plot meant to protect him from prosecution over the crash.

His case file is currently with the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Mr Kaparo said church leaders should set good examples by not engaging in violence.

Governors 'a threat to devolution'

BY NATION CORRESPONDENT

Mombasa Senator Hassan Omar has accused governors of being the major stumbling block to devolution through abuse of power and misuse of resources.

Mr Omar accused the county bosses of turning themselves into "inaccessible gods" who drive around in long motorcades "and even mobile toilets" like heads of state.

He urged Kenyans to protect the "hard-earned devolution now under threat from the 47 governors across the country".

County reports

"We have read the devolution report and from what it says, governors all over the country are doing dirty things. If we don't protect it, nobody will want devolution in Kenya in a few years time," he said during a dinner hosted by the civil society in Mombasa yesterday ahead of the International Youth Day.

The senator said he had moved around several counties and found that all governors were behaving the same way.

The senator further accused the county government of hiring workers "experienced in stealing and conning" thereby locking out local youths from job and business opportunities.

Confusion as KPC talks to officials of two regions on the same project

BY MUCHIRI GITONGA
mgitonga@ke.nationmedia.com

There is confusion over where a multi-billion shilling fuel depot in the Mt Kenya region will be built, with two counties laying claim to the project.

The Laikipia and Nyeri county governments claim Kenya Pipeline Company (KPC) will build the depot, which will cost about Sh10 billion, in their respective regions.

The confusion arose after a KPC delegation met officials from both counties but on separate days and discussed the matter.

On August 5, KPC officials led by Business Development Manager John Kithete met Nyeri Deputy Governor Wamathai

Kenya, Uganda seal deal on pipeline

Kenya and Uganda this week agreed on a route for a Sh400 billion pipeline that will transport crude oil from Albertine to Lokichar in Turkana County.

The agreement was made during President Uhuru Kenyatta's state visit to Uganda.

The 1,380-kilometre pipeline will take about three years to build, just in time for Tullow's projected start in oil production in 2020.

The pipeline will serve Kenya, Uganda and South Sudan when complete. Ethiopia, where oil exploration activity has recently increased, could eventually benefit from the pipeline.

Githaiga.

"I met Kenya Pipeline Company officials and we discussed how we could jointly put up a petroleum depot to serve counties such as Kiambu, Baringo, Isiolo, Laikipia and Murang'a," the deputy governor said.

He said the project will cost the company Sh9.6 billion.

Mr Kithete said after the meeting that devolution of the firm's pipeline network was in line with its new mission.

"KPC projects are concentrated along one corridor, leaving out most parts of the country. This made us think of devolving our pipeline network to most parts of the country," he said.

The next day, the KPC officials met Laikipia Governor Joshua Irungu at his Nanyuki office where plans to construct a spur line and a fuel depot worth Sh10.8 billion were discussed.

"The construction, to be undertaken jointly by the Kenya Pipeline Company and Laikipia County Government is aimed at bringing services closer to the people in line with the Constitution," County Secretary John Mwaniki said in a statement yesterday.

He said several meetings had been held between KPC and county officials and there would be more "to ensure the project is professionally executed".

He said the proposed depot will serve neighbouring counties of Isiolo, Meru, Nyeri, Samburu, Nyandarua, Muranga, Tharaka-Nithi, Embu, Baringo and parts of Nakuru.

A KPC spokesperson who declined to be named, however, told the Nation that the firm had not signed a memorandum of understanding with any of the two county governments.

"There was nothing binding about these meetings. For now we cannot pre-empt where the depot will be because a lot of studies and engineering will have to be done to determine the best area," she said.

The KPC team said it had visited various sites and most of them were ideal for construction of the depot.

Duale opposes ministry plan to postpone exams in region

Teachers and children in northern Kenya are ready for the national examinations, National Assembly Majority Leader Aden Duale said yesterday. Speaking while meeting with head teachers in Garissa Town, Mr Duale (left) faulted Education Cabinet Secretary Jacob Kaimenyi for saying that the ministry is considering postponing the national examinations for candidates in North Eastern for lack of teachers as a result of frequent attacks by Al-Shabaab. Mr Duale said Prof Kaimenyi should have consulted leaders in the region and education stakeholders. "I can confirm here that children in the region are ready to do their national examinations, both KCSE and KCPE despite the teacher shortage," he told the school heads.

Kiambu | Squatters say former Githunguri MP Magugu helped them get the land

Swazuri moves in to resolve row over ownership of Kamiti land

Five groups lay claim to land that was once used as a body dump-site by criminals

BY ERIC WAINAINA
ewainaina@ke.nationmedia.com

The National Land Commission has stepped in to end a row by five groups over the ownership of a 420-acre forest land.

NLC chairman Muhammad Swazuri yesterday toured Kamiti/Anmer land at Muoroto, which was previously owned by Kenya Forest Service.

He said he did so after three groups wrote to his office claiming ownership of the land.

Dr Swazuri met members of Kamiti Development Association, Muungano wa Kamiti Squatters and Kamiti Forest Association. The other two sent memorandums.

Every group said it was allocated the land by President Daniel Moi in 1996.

Kamiti Development Association Chairman Kinyanjui Macharia said Mr Moi made the announcement during a visit to the controversial Mbo-I Kamiti Land Company and directed the Lands Ministry to implement the directive.

According to Mr Kinyanjui, the 1,400 beneficiaries were picked from all allocation in Kiambu District.

"The process was approved by the County Council of Kiambu, the lands office and the Forest Department. The land was then cleared, demarcated and allotment letters written before the process was abruptly stopped," Mr Kinyanjui said.

He added that his team established a public primary school, a cemetery, government-funded water projects and was in the process of constructing a stadium in the farm.

Mr David Kibunja, who was the county council chairman between 1990 and 1996, said the allocation was done after concerns were raised that criminals were dumping bodies in the forest.

Mr PMG Kamau, who was the Kiambu County Council clerk and who served as the secretary to the committee involved in the allocation, said Kamiti Development Association was legally given the land.

"The only thing pending is the degazettement of the land," Mr Kamau said and accused some officials in the county and national governments of attempting to grab it.

Mr Kinyanjui said in 2000, a group calling itself Kamiti Forest Association moved in to claim ownership of the land. Muungano Group split from it, sparking a long ownership battle.

Muungano Group Chairperson

Irene Gitau said squatters who worked on the land owned by expatriates got it after the then Githunguri MP Arthur Magugu asked President Moi to give them.

She said after six years, a group of wealthy people and Kiambu County Council and national government officials invaded the land and evicted them. She said some squatters were injured.

"They destroyed our houses and property and they have ignored three court rulings in our favour," she said.

She added that the land had been degazetted but not subdivided though farming was going on.

However, Kiambu County government officials maintained that the land was registered as a forest.

Area MP Jude Njomo said some groups were swindling unsuspecting Kenyans of their money, claiming they could sell them plots.

He said one of the groups had opened offices in Ruiru and Juja.

Dr Swazuri said the commission would study the ownership documents and the process used by the groups to acquire the land with a view of getting a solution.

"If we find that the documents and the process were legal, we will give title deeds within a month. If there were shady deals, we will revoke everything," Dr Swazuri said.

The process was approved by the County Council of Kiambu and the Lands office. The land was then cleared, demarcated and allotment letters written"

Battle rages in row over 'sneaked' wards kitty

BY PHILIP BWAYO

The executive has accused MCAs of trying to "sneak" a Sh690.3 million ward development fund into this year's budget proposals.

Though the executive says the move is illegal, MCAs insist it is meant to bring development closer to the people.

The dispute may have a direct impact on residents, with sources saying Governor Patrick Khaemba had declined to assent to the final budget proposal.

Assembly Budget Committee Chairman David Kisaka said some allocations that did not affect the lives of residents directly had to be removed or reduced.

"We had to do away with some allocations we have been making since the onset of devolution because residents felt they were not benefiting," he said.

690.3m

Shillings MCAs are alleged to have 'sneaked' into budget estimates to finance ward development fund

Kaplamai Ward MCA Sam Mutuli said most of the funds meant for development are ending up in the pockets of contractors.

"The essence of the ward development fund is to finance projects at the grassroots level. The executive must support this decision because it will assist them in development," said Mr Mutuli.

Deputy Governor Stanley Tarus has, however, insisted that the fund is illegal as MCAs are not mandated to manage funds.

"MCAs cannot manage funds yet they are supposed to oversee how the executive utilises development cash," he said.

Governor Khaemba has said the matter had been taken to the Controller of Budget for guidance.

The MCAs say the ward development fund will be responsible for road construction, land acquisition, bursaries, water projects and establishment of cattle dips.

Plan to lease three game reserves draws sharp reaction

BY VIVIAN JEBET

The Isiolo County Government's alleged plan to lease three game reserves has drawn sharp reactions.

The county assembly's Minority Leader Moses Kithinji wants Governor Godana Doyo to come clean on the alleged deal.

However, the Lands and Tourism Committee chairman Hassan Kumpa has refuted claims of an agreement, saying it was just a proposal. He said plans to involve the committee, stakeholders and locals are ongoing

Local dailies had earlier reported that 19 out of 20 MCAs were aware of the agreement to lease out Sarova Shaba, Bisanadi and Buffalo Springs game reserves to African Park Management Organisation that helps revive reserves.

But a group of ward representatives has denied participating in the deal.

This comes after two lobby groups in Isiolo strongly opposed the lease plans on grounds that stakeholders were not involved in discussions.

Mr Kithinji alleged that only one MCA knew about the plan and was part of the team that toured the reserves last week.

The Minority Leader said he would table a Motion in the House tomorrow seeking to know the cost of leasing the reserves, the lease period, the benefits and why the executive did not involve the assembly and the public.

"We do not agree with their decision. This is a public property and a source of employment for residents, if the county government is unable to manage our reserves, then they should tell us," said Mr Kithinji.

It is alleged that the African Park Management would fence, market the three parks and the county government will not get any revenue for the first 10 years.

According to Waso Trust Land Project Chief Executive Officer Liban Golicha, the group met last week to discuss the way forward.

He said the firm and the county government had already developed a business plan.

Machakos | Political battle looms between Jubilee-leaning governor and opposition leaders

Mutua shows mettle to wrestle Kalonzo for political supremacy

MPs from Wiper turf tell governor he is ripe to play major political role in Ukambani

BY WAMBUA SAMMY

Governor Alfred Mutua hosted five MPs at a rally in Athi River on Monday, in a gambit against the Opposition if not testing the political waters in Ukambani.

The MPs mandated him to silence his detractors by uniting leaders from the region and lead them to prosperity.

The event may not have measured up to the buzz it had created — only one MP from Machakos, Mwala's Vincent Musyoka, was present — but it was notable that the governor could marshal some troops from Wiper leader Kalonzo Musyoka's bastion of Kitui. These were Rachel Nyamai (Kitui South), John Munuve Mati (Mwingi North), Joe Mutambo (Mwingi Central) and former Kibwezi MP Kalembe Ndile. Kilome's Regina Ndambuki (Makueni) was also present. Their message? Time had come for Ukambani leaders to develop their region.

Governor Mutua has not made secret his desire to work with the Jubilee Government and has regularly hosted President Uhuru Kenyatta in Machakos, to the chagrin of Wiper leaders and their bigger political vehicle, Cord. In May, the President opened a refurbished Machakos Level Five Hospital at the governor's invitation. Significantly, Machakos County had taken in medical equipment from the National Government that many governors, especially from the Opposition, had shunned.

The President's visit happened when all indications were that suspended Lands Secretary Charity Ngilu would decamp from Jubilee, most likely for Cord, although the possibility of her going solo cannot be ruled out. Hence, Dr Mutua was probably telling the Opposition that he hadn't run out of options.

Ngilu's re-entry into politics will, of course, alter the Ukambani political configuration, with the possibility of a second or third credible force revolving around her.

And, considering the enmity between the governor and Machakos Senator Johnson Muthama, a party heavyweight in his own right, the governor's membership of Wiper stands on quicksand, a situation that Jubilee will exploit to its full advantage.

The flipside, of course, is that Dr Mutua has positioned himself as a force in Ukambani politics.

Aware of his value to Jubilee, which is determined to create a national image (as evident in its forays into Luhya territory and the appointment of Eugene Wamalwa to the Cabinet) with a view to netting a bigger catch for the 2017 polls, the governor has been strengthening his political currency, the Monday rally falling into the game plan.

Also going for him and his ultimate

I urge you to call a meeting of all leaders from Ukambani so that we can chart the political direction of the community”

Mwala MP Vincent Musyoka to Governor Alfred Mutua

BACKGROUND

Wiper leaders rebuke Mutua

Governor Mutua's rally came two days after Wiper leader Kalonzo Musyoka and the party's officials held a rally in Machakos, where they announced they would decide the fate of rebels, and chided the governor for not attending the rally.

Wiper Secretary-General Hassan Omar said it was disrespectful for Dr Mutua to skip the rally.

He also took issue with the governor's dalliance with the Jubilee Government, saying the National Government had not helped the region in the past 50 years.

camp of choice is the youthful leader's enviable development record.

Even critics who see nothing but showmanship in his projects are considerably challenged when beneficiaries talk of a pre-Mutua “development vacuum”, not to mention an Infotrak survey that recently shored up his fortunes by ranking him the best performing governor.

A wily politician, Dr Mutua was a fortnight ago seeing off President Barack Obama. How he pulled that one off, considering that during his government spokesman days he contemptuously called the future US President a “junior senator whose views on Kenya were of little consequence”, attests to his closeness to the powers that be. Not every politician was accorded the privilege.

On Monday, the Mwala MP was all praises for the governor. “Our governor is a symbol of development for the whole country. We need to come together as Kamba leaders and seek his views on how to promote development,” he said.

Indeed, the host promised to convene a meeting of all leaders from Ukambani to chart the region's political direction. But more telling was the Mwala MP's assertion that Dr Mutua was ripe to lead the region, when he told him: “I will not lie to you; the writing is on the wall. Time is ripe for you to lead the region.”

The lawmaker's sentiments were echoed by other MPs. They said some people had been in leadership for more than 20 years but had not helped the region to develop.

More scurrilous was former Kibwezi MP Kalembe Ndile, whose criticism of Cord and Wiper leadership was at the least, a below-the-belt punch.

Later, Governor Mutua said, on his Facebook page, that the five MPs were just a section of leaders who wanted change in the region. “These leaders are among many others who have resolved to work together and embrace the Maendeleo Chap Chap philosophy to hasten development in our region,” he posted.

Agency to name land owners due for payout

BY GITONGA MARETE

The names of people and organisations that will be affected by the expansion of the Mombasa-Mariakani road will be published in two weeks, Kenya National Highways Authority (KeNHA) officials have said.

The list will include names of owners of the 25 hectares of land the National Land Commission (NLC) will acquire along the 40 kilometre stretch, said KeNHA surveyor Daniel Muteti.

They will be published in the Kenya Gazette.

On Monday, the authority announced that 820 structures including homes, public institutions and churches will have to be demolished to pave way for expansion of the road into a dual carriage way at a cost of Sh22 billion.

The African Development Bank (AfDB) has already released Sh10 billion for the construction of the 11 kilometre Mombasa-Jomvu stretch. The tender process has already began.

Also, talks with the Germany Development Bank (KfW) to provide the remaining Sh12 billion for the second phase of the project from Jomvu to Mariakani are at an advanced stage, KeNHA said.

July 30th

The deadline the agency gave for developers to stop construction

“After publication of the names, the commission will value land and structures. We will then announce a hearing date when the affected persons will be required to present themselves for verification,” said Mr Muteti.

He revealed that bigger chunks of land will be required at Changamwe roundabout, Mikindani and Jomvu junctions, where interchanges with overpasses will be built.

During a sensitisation meeting for Mariakani residents on Tuesday, the locals demanded that KeNHA should sign an MoU with those occupying road reserves to ensure that the agency compensates them. They said mere promises are not enough and cited empty promises they were given in 2005 during the construction of the Bachuma – Maji ya Chumvi road.

“At the time, we were told the same thing you are telling us now but our businesses were destroyed without compensation. We don't want to be conned again. We want a signed memorandum,” said Mr-Zuha Dzombo, a resident.

However, Ms Rose Oloo, a sociologist with KeNHA, said nobody should be “conned” of their right since the compensation package was part of the project.

“This is one of the few unique projects where financiers have committed to pay the property of those who have built structures on road reserves,” said Ms Oloo. But he maintained that speculators who built structures on the reserves after the cut-off date of July 30 last year would not be compensated.

Group receives praise for investing in talent, costumes, instruments and training

Mount Kenya University yesterday received a standing ovation for a brass band performance during the national music festival which closes today.

The group presented selected melodies that Kenyans have come to associate with the popular police band, and one would have been forgiven for believing they were "watching the real thing".

The university received praise for investing in talent, costumes, instruments and training.

The presentation at Kisumu Girls High School Hall was the only one in the brass band category.

The team of 15 also had a good gender balance, according to the adjudicators, making all members of the audience identify with the performance.

University of Eastern Africa-Baraton overwhelmed other institutions in the instrumental Violin Solo, Piano Duo and Guitar solo.

In the Woodwind Solo performances, which had the highest entries for the first time, Kenyatta University's Daniel Zalo emerged tops.

He was followed by Edmond Obilah of Technical University of Kenya and Enoch Migiyo of University of Eastern Africa-Baraton. The two tied at second position.

Kenyatta University's Samuel Mutuka and Francis Kilyungu of Technical University of Kenya tied at third position.

Zetech University emerged winner in the Drum Ensemble Own Choice category. Masinde Muliro University won in the Violin Solo Own Choice category. University of Eastern Africa-Baraton was second.

The universities were performing in the second last day of this year's Kenya National Music Festival.

I watched my son die as nurses downed tools

BY KAZUNGU SAMUEL AND MACHARIA MWANGI

To Ms Betty Tavarathe the nurses' strike at Kilifi County Hospital was not just an industrial action but a dispute that took away her son.

The gutted mother (above) believes that had her 11-year-old son been given urgent and proper medical attention, he would not have died of meningitis yesterday morning, only four hours after nurses downed tools to protest poor working conditions among other grievances.

The boy was admitted to the Kilifi County Hospital on Sunday evening.

Yesterday Ms Tavarathe told of her helplessness when she noticed that medical officers were on a go slow on Monday. The following day in the evening, the nurses through their union officials announced their strike notice.

She spoke as she waited clearance to take her son's body away for burial, recalling that she had to plead with the nurse on duty to admit her son because he was in a critical condition. From the bed where her young son breath his last, Ms Tavarathe said that the boy developed complications in the wee hours of Wednesday.

"I noticed that my child was dying and I immediately alerted the nurse on duty to act fast," she said amidst sobs. "But she came, gave him one long look and muttered something to the effect that people are on strike and not working. She returned to her office and sat down," recalled Ms Tavarathe.

"I was so shocked at the reaction because my son was by then groaning in deep pain on the bed and fighting desperately for his life," she narrated.

"When the nurse came here, she discovered that the child was in a critical condition and tried to take him to a theatre. My child did not make it to the theatre room. He died on the way," she said.

Elsewhere two patients died as the strike entered its third day. Among the dead was a seven-year-old boy, who was being ferried to the Kenyatta National Hospital for specialised treatment when the ambulance detoured to Naivasha Subcounty Hospital to have him attended to only to find the hospital workers had downed their tools.

Naivasha Medical Superintendent Dr Joseph Mburu said the boy had severe head injuries and died before being attended to by the few nurses still on duty.

Kerrow condemns decision to close quarries in region

BY LUCAS BARASA

Senator Billow Kerrow has criticised the closing of quarries in the area.

"The decision by the County Commissioner to close all quarries ostensibly because of insecurity clearly flies in the face of the government's oft-repeated assurances that it will ensure the security of Kenyans in the region," Mr Kerrow said.

"The quarries are within 10 square kilometres of Mandera Town, which boasts the highest concentration of security personnel in the region, estimated at over 800," he said.

Mr Kerrow said it was inconceivable that such a large number of personnel were unable to provide security for the quarries.

"Why do we have all these security officers in the town if they cannot protect Kenyans?" Mr Kerrow asked.

"After failing to protect teachers whose departure has destroyed learning in schools, this latest action is bound to embolden terrorists and increase resentment of government among the residents.... It is a shame for the security agencies to fold their arms and leave Mandera residents to their fate," he said.

Mandera East Deputy County Commissioner Elvis Korir said the ban followed an assessment of the security situation in the area.

"We decided to suspend quarrying activities for security reasons but once we reorganise our apparatus the stone miners will resume work," he said on Tuesday.

Chief stabbed to death as he leads raid on illicit brew dens

BY BARNABAS BII
AND CHEBOITE KIGEN

A chief was stabbed to death as he lead a crackdown on illicit brew in Baringo yesterday.

Ossen location senior chief Jeremiah Chepkwony Kendele died on the spot after he was stabbed twice in the chest.

He was with Tilion assistant chief Musa Toroitich during the raid on illicit brew that has claimed several lives in parts of the region.

"The administrator entered the house and attempted to flush out the suspect. But he was stabbed twice in the chest and bled to death," said Baringo County Commissioner Erick Chepkonga.

The suspect had earlier resisted arrest by area assistant chief.

The administrators led the raid following complaints by residents.

"We heard commotion from the house and when we entered, we found the chief bleeding," said Mr Toroitich on the phone.

Administration police officers saved the suspect from being lynched by a mob seething with anger.

The residents burnt down the house of the suspect.

Mr Okwanyo said the suspect was being held at Kabarnet police station.

Meanwhile, the Nandi County government will establish a multi-million shilling rehabilitation centre to combat drug addiction and empower youths.

Governor Cleophas Lagat said this was in response to rising alcoholism.

OLD MUTUAL FINANCIAL RESULTS

INTERIM RESULTS for the six months ended 30 June 2015

Group Chief Executive
Old Mutual plc

OLD MUTUAL GROUP

This has been an exceptional six months for Old Mutual.

Last year, we reallocated significant capital to buy quality businesses in our core markets. This year is about ensuring that these investments are fully integrated and making the returns we expect.

Our businesses in South Africa continue to perform very well. Old Mutual South Africa grew profits by 14% and Nedbank grew its headline earnings by 16%.

Old Mutual's Rest of Africa businesses are growing strongly, with profits up 31%; and Nedbank's Rest of Africa division has seen significant growth through the acquisition of a 20% stake in Ecobank Transnational Inc.

In the UK, we are seeing further proof that we have the right business model and believe we will be a net beneficiary from the ongoing reform in the pensions market.

This is the last set of results I will present as Group Chief Executive of Old Mutual. I am delighted to be able to pass on the stewardship of the Group to my successor, Bruce Hemphill, when it is in such robust health.

While we expect the next six months to be challenging for emerging markets, and exchange rate movements will likely temper sterling reported growth, I am confident that by remaining focused on meeting our customers' needs and improving the operating efficiencies of the business we will continue to make good progress.

OLD MUTUAL EMERGING MARKETS

This has been another six months of strong profit growth and good strategic progress from Old Mutual Emerging Markets (OMEM).

We had strong financial delivery during the period under review:

- OMEM Life APE sales increased by 20% to R5.5bn, including Rest of Africa growth of 44% and Asia & Latin America growth of 62%.
- OMEM Non-life sales rose by 41% to R82.0bn.

Good momentum in our retail business in South Africa: We continue to achieve great success with our new Old Mutual Invest tax-free savings account. Our sales are R177m (at end-June), with 15% from digital channels and 44% of these customers being new to Old Mutual. Mass Foundation Life APE sales were up 23% while Retail Affluent Life APE Sales increased by 35%.

Continued progress on our targets in our South African short-term (Property & Casualty) operations: The net underwriting result of R147m translates into a year-to-date underwriting margin of 3.2%. We also agreed to purchase a further 33.6% interest in Credit Guaranteed Insurance Corporation for about R600m, subject to regulatory approvals.

Good progress with expansion in Rest of Africa: Its profit contribution is currently at 11.3% as a percentage of South Africa's profits. We also successfully completed the acquisition of UAP, resulting in a majority stake of 60.7%.

Excellent sales growth in our Asia & Latin America businesses: Overall Asia & Latin America Life APE sales are up a combined 62%.

Return on Equity (ROE) remains within the target range of 20% - 25% whilst we are investing in Rest of Africa. Overall, our OMEM RoE has improved to 23.2% from 22.8% (end-2014).

The East and Central Africa region is in a unique position to realise the Old Mutual Group's vision of becoming Africa's financial services champion by 2020.

We aim to achieve this through the provision of corporate and retail financial services to our existing and potential customers, while delivering maximum value.

This has been realised in the acquisition of a controlling stake in Faulu Microfinance bank in 2013 and UAP Holdings in 2015. We now have a presence in Kenya, Uganda, Tanzania, Rwanda, South Sudan and the DRC.

The newly merged UAP-Old Mutual Group business is now one of the largest financial services providers in East and Central Africa offering customers a comprehensive and enhanced range of financial services which include life, general insurance, banking and asset management, as well as a wider, more accessible distribution network and more digital innovation.

Our customers can now be assured of solutions that best meet their financial requirements as well as unrivalled convenience to serve their needs.

Going forward, our successful operations in Uganda, Tanzania, South Sudan, Rwanda and the DRC will open up many new markets and opportunities - and drive faster, greater growth for the entire region.

Villagers describe horror as 50 killed in Nigeria market blast

Authorities had said earlier that 47 people had been killed but upped toll by three

BY AMINU ABUBAKAR
KANO, Nigeria, Wednesday

Nigerian villagers today described the carnage unleashed by a huge market bomb explosion in jihadist group Boko Haram's northeastern heartland as the death toll rose to 50.

The bomb — concealed in a crop-spraying backpack — ripped through the weekly market in the village of Sabon Gari, around 135 kilometres south of Borno state capital Maiduguri, during peak trading on Tuesday.

"When the blast happened people in the market fled in fear. They abandoned their wares. Some managed to return for their wares but some never came back," Samaila Biu, a local trader, told AFP.

"The market was littered with all sorts of articles. The mobile phone section was a mess with many dead and pieces of flesh and blood splattered all over."

The explosion went off at about 1:15 pm, (1215 GMT) Biu said, just after the market had entered its most busy trading hours and the immediate vicinity of the bomb was packed with merchants and shoppers, witnesses said.

Authorities said in the immediate aftermath 47 people had been killed but upped the toll by three overnight.

"One more person died from his wounds and two more bodies were later brought to the morgue from near the scene of the blast. Now there are 50 dead and 51 injured," a nurse at Biu General Hospital, around 50 kilometres away, told AFP.

Yuram Bura, a member of a local vigilante group fighting Boko Haram alongside the army, said the two bodies recovered later had been found in bush land some distance away from the market. "We believe they managed

BACKGROUND

Nigeria demands US assistance

Weapons: The Nigerian military has long argued that it is hampered by a lack of weaponry, and President Muhammadu Buhari warned Washington last month that a US refusal to arm his troops because of "so-called human rights violations" was helping Boko Haram.

Pledge: The US has vowed to help Nigeria defeat the insurgency but it is prohibited under law from sending weapons to countries that fail to tackle human rights abuses.

to flee the scene with injuries from the explosion but died on the way," he told AFP.

Dozens of soldiers formed a security ring on Wednesday around the market, which was littered with footwear and clothing and still spattered with congealed blood, and patrolled the streets nearby.

"The village is still in shock although most of the victims were from other places far and near who came to attend the market," Bura said.

"The villagers can be seen in groups talking about the incident while soldiers and vigilantes remain on alert." No one has claimed responsibility for the attack but witnesses said the blast bore the hallmarks of Boko Haram, which has previously targeted crowded bus stations, markets, mosques and churches during its bloody six-year insurgency.

Washington condemned the attack and said it would continue to provide "a range of counterterrorism assistance to help Nigeria and its regional partners". "We will continue to work closely with the Nigerian government and our international partners to combat Boko Haram and assist the many victims of its senseless brutality."

Boko Haram has killed more than 15,000 people since 2009, increasing the frequency and intensity of its attacks since President Muhammadu Buhari took the helm in Nigeria on May 29.

Ryan Cummings, chief security analyst at South African consultancy Red 24, said the attack demonstrated the "reversion of Boko Haram to a traditional asymmetric warfare".

"By conducting sporadic attacks targeting civilian interests across much of Nigeria, Boko Haram has created the demoralising perception that it is a threat which is omnipresent, capable of inflicting harm on Nigerians in any given place at any given time," he told AFP.

Cummings said such acts of mass violence helped the jihadist group to over-inflate the public perception of its strength while undermining the legitimacy of the government as a guarantor of security. (AFP)

Rwanda records massive decrease in Aids-related deaths

KIGALI, Wednesday

Rwanda has registered a sharp decline in the number of Aids-related deaths in the last ten years, according to a report released by the Rwanda ministry of health.

The findings reveal that the post-genocide country has registered 78 per cent drop in Aids related deaths over the past 10 years, a significant progress in fighting the scourge of HIV/Aids pandemic in the country.

The report says that between 2004 and 2014, deaths related to fully blown AIDS declined while Rwanda maintained 3 per cent HIV prevalence.

Speaking to reporters on Tuesday, Dr Agnes Binagwaho, Rwanda minister of health said that the HIV decline is attributed to successful implementation of prevention programmes especially behaviour change and successful treatment. "Fighting HIV has come a long way, we started with only 3000 patients enrolled on anti-retroviral therapy but we can now treat and prevent HIV at universal standards," she said.

The study indicates that new HIV infections have reduced by 50 per cent over the last 10 years while life expectancy for people living with HIV has added to more than 25 years, after diagnosis.

It further reveals that annually about 120,000 people are newly diagnosed with HIV in Rwanda while 5000 die of the virus.

Prevalence is 3.5 per cent among women and 2.5 per cent among men; however condom use is at 25 per cent."

Fighting HIV has come a long way, we started with only 3000 patients enrolled on anti-retroviral therapy but we can now treat and prevent HIV at universal standards," said Dr Sabin Nsanzimana division manager HIV and Sexual Transmitted Infections diseases at Rwanda Biomedical Centre. (Xinhua)

UN probes C. Africa peacekeeper rape claims

LIBREVILLE, Wednesday

The UN mission in the Central African Republic launched a probe yesterday into allegations its soldiers had raped a 12-year-old girl and shot dead a teenager and his father.

The probe was opened following allegations made by London-based rights watchdog Amnesty International, which said the alleged incidents took place on August 2 and 3 as Rwandan and Cameroonian peacekeepers were conducting an operation in the capital, Bangui.

In an initial response, UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon said he was "dismayed and disappointed" by the latest claims of sexual abuse by peacekeepers, his spokesman Stephane Dujarric told reporters in New York.

"Our evidence strongly suggests that a UN peacekeeper raped a young girl and that other UN peacekeepers indiscriminately killed two civilians," said Joanne Mariner, Senior Crisis Response Adviser at Amnesty International.

The UN mission, known by its French acronym of MINUSCA, said through its spokesman Hamadoun Toure that it was "not aware" of the allegations but was taking the matter "very seriously."

"We have opened a probe," Toure told AFP, saying the mission would seek "established and verifiable proof."

Dujarric said the UN chief was taking the situation "very seriously" and was expected to issue a formal statement.

"No misconduct of this nature can be tolerated," he told reporters. (AFP)

Kidnappers of imams demand $20,000

The kidnappers of six Tanzanian imams and their Congolese driver have asked for a ransom of 20,000 US dollars, a source from the Congolese Islamic Community (COMICO) said Tuesday. The six Tanzanian imams and their Congolese driver were kidnapped on August 2, 2015, by men suspected to be members of the Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda in Rutshuru territory, North Kivu province in the east of the Democratic Republic of Congo (DR Congo). "Currently, they have been located in Rutshuru forest. There are people following them." (Xinhua)

FINACCESS HOUSEHOLD SURVEY, 2015

The Central Bank of Kenya (CBK), the Kenya National Bureau of Statistics (KNBS) and Financial Sector Deepening Trust (FSD) Kenya (herein referred to as "Partners") in collaboration with other key stakeholders are in the process of undertaking the 2015 nationwide FinAccess Household Survey on behalf of the Financial Access Partnership (FAP). Created in 2005, FAP is a public-private partnership comprised of Government ministries, regulatory agencies, financial sector associations, development partners and research institutions to track and champion a better understanding of Kenya's financial access and inclusion landscape. FAP spearheaded three successful FinAccess Household Surveys in 2006, 2009 and 2013 that generated nationwide data on how Kenyans access and use financial services. These datasets are widely used by the public and private sectors to develop policies, systems, products, and delivery channels that enhance financial inclusion in Kenya.

The 2013 survey identified new trends in financial inclusion, highlighted consumer protection issues, and assessed the frequency, use and quality of financial services in Kenya. The study also revealed that 66.7% of the adult population in Kenya has access to formal financial services. There is also a growing trend towards the use of both formal and informal financial instruments. The full 2013 report can be accessed on <http://www.fsdkenya.org/finaccess-2013-report.html>.

The Partners have hired a research firm, Ipsos Limited, to undertake the survey for the fourth FinAccess Household Survey. The survey will track progress since the 2013 survey, illustrate the impact of affordable financial services on household welfare, and identify other barriers to financial inclusion.

The survey will run from 4th August 2015 to 30th November 2015 countrywide. All government ministries and agencies, county governments, households and members of the general public are requested to collaborate and accord the necessary support to the enumerators from Ipsos Limited, Research Plus, KNBS, FSD Kenya and CBK as they undertake this important survey.

Libya chaos deepens as Premier offers to quit in service row

If my exit is the solution, then I announce it here, he says

TRIPOLI, Wednesday

The future of Libya's internationally recognised government was uncertain today after Prime Minister Abdullah al-Thani said he would resign, as fraught peace talks were set to enter a second day.

It was unclear whether Mr Thani planned to follow through on his resignation vow, made during an emotional live television appearance where he faced a barrage of angry questions from citizens.

The move added to the political chaos in Libya, as the country's rival factions were to meet for a second day of UN-sponsored peace talks in Geneva.

Mr Thani faced questions in the programme on Tuesday from Libyans blaming his government for the lack of basic services such as electricity and poor security in areas it controls.

"If my exit is the solution, then I announce it here," Mr Thani said during the talk show. "My resignation will be submitted to the parliament on Sunday."

The prime minister, who escaped an assassination attempt in May when gunmen opened fire on his car after a parliament meeting, was also hit with accusations of corruption against his government in the television interview.

Libya, which plunged into chaos after the fall and killing of its leader Muammar Gaddafi in a 2011 revolution, has two rival governments and parliaments vying for power, as well as several militia groups battling for control of the country's oil wealth.

The country is gripped by unrest with Benghazi, the main city in the east, caught in a daily war between pro- and anti-government forces. Mr Thani's government has been working out of a small eastern city near the border with Egypt since an Islamist militia alliance captured the capital Tripoli last year. The international community recognises the parliament that sits in the eastern port city of Tobruk, which installed the controversial General Khalifa Haftar as its army chief in March. (AFP)

Africa marks one year without polio: UN

MOGADISHU, Wednesday

Africa has marked one year since the last case of recorded polio, with the United Nations celebrating today a key step towards eradicating the disease.

The last recorded case on the continent was in Somalia on August 11, 2014, although health officials must wait two more years before declaring the continent free from the highly infectious, crippling virus.

The UN children's agency UNICEF, which plays a key role in polio vaccinations, called it an "extraordinary achievement" but warned it was "not an end point".

Success depends on the continuation of vaccination campaigns and close monitoring of possible cases, it said.

"We have had no new cases for a year despite all the challenges in the country," Unicef's chief for Somalia Steven Lauwerier told AFP on Wednesday. "We never want to see another Somali child being paralysed by this preventable virus."

That means we need to continue to support the vaccination campaigns to ensure polio is completely eradicated." (AFP)

 - Resort Cities at Lamu, Isiolo and Lake Turkana;
 - Merchant Oil Refinery at Lamu;
 - In Kenya, the LAPSSET Corridor Project actualizes recent policy and institutional reforms and Vision 2030 strategy as critical infrastructure for spurring growth, providing an alternative transport corridor and offering a platform for opening up the vast interior part of Africa including the northern parts of Kenya, consisting of over 70% of the country's land mass which to date remains unexplored. The project is also intended to attract Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) especially given the recent discoveries of oil, gas, rare minerals and coal in East Africa where the Corridor passes.
 - The LAPSSET Corridor has 2 elements; the Infrastructure Corridor of 500 m wide where the line infrastructure of road, railway pipelines, power transmission; location based infrastructure of port, airports, cities and special economic zones and the economic Corridor of 50 km on either sides of the infrastructure corridor where industrial and commercial investments and farms will be situated.
 - The LAPSSET Corridor Development Authority (LCDA) now invites proposals for provision of the following consulting services: Strategic Environmental Assessment (SEA) for the LAPSSET Infrastructure Corridor.
 - Towards the SEA Study, the LCDA has prepared and submitted Briefing Note to NEMA who have subsequently issued Notice to Proceed to the next stage. The duties of the SEA Consultant will include but not be limited to the following:-
 - Scoping of the LAPSSET Masterplan in line with SEA Guidelines
 - Manage the Detailed SEA Stage
 - Manage all Stakeholder Consultations including the Public Review Phase,
 - Prepare and submit reports to NEMA through the LCDA
 - Manage and coordinate the Validation Meeting
 - Liaise with NEMA on all issues arising from the SEA outputs and stages
- More details on the services are provided in the Terms of Reference / Objectives in the main RFP document.
- Firms will be selected under Quality and Cost-Based Selection (QCBS) and procedures described in the RFP.
 - Interested eligible candidates may obtain further information and inspect the RFP documents at the Procurement office, LAPSSET Corridor Development Authority, 2nd Floor, Chester House, Koinange Street, during normal working hours.

NO RESPITE | The sanctions have piled up over the years

Sudanese President Omar al-Bashir arrives for a group photograph of leaders at the 25th African Union Summit in Sandton South Africa on June 14, 2015. Obama Administration's trade ban has hit his country hard.

Sudan cancer patients hit by US sanctions

Only a very small number of wealthy patients can escape the ban

WASHINGTON, Wednesday

Sanctions imposed by the United States on Sudan is costing civilian lives and hurting vulnerable groups, a director of a Washington-based think tank has warned.

Dr Peter Pham, an expert on African affairs at the Atlantic Council said among those suffering from the two-decade-long sanctions are breast cancer victims.

"With the exception of the very small number of wealthy patients who can travel abroad for medical attention, the only option is the Khartoum Breast Care Centre (KBCC), a state-of-the-art non-profit hospital," he said in a statement sent to newsrooms.

The centre uses equipment purchased from General Electric (GE) and for maintenance and support, a licence has to be procured from the US Treasury Department's Office of Foreign Asset Control under the current sanctions regime.

This, according to Dr Pham, affects the operation of the center, often times leaving patients stranded without help waiting for a license to be acquired.

Fully functional

"Demand is so high that KBCC works virtually around the clock, so, when fully functional, the mammography machine screens an average of 9,600 people per year, 98 per cent of whom have no access to equivalent medical care elsewhere."

Since 2000, cancer has jumped from the tenth to the second most common cause of death in the country. Among Sudanese women, breast cancer accounts for 35 per cent of all cancer diagnoses.

"What is undeniable is that having applied a blunt instrument at the regime, the United States has also taken a very real human toll on some vulnerable groups unfortunate enough to be caught in the middle," he said in a statement sent to newsrooms.

Khartoum has been the target of United States sanctions for more than twenty years, which have blocked assets of the government, and interfered with trade.

The sanctions have piled up over the years: to the original set imposed by President Bill Clinton in the 1990s to punish the regime in Khartoum for its alleged support of international terrorism (Osama bin Laden lived there until 1996), additional measures were added by President George W. Bush and the US Congress a decade later in response to human rights abuses in the Darfur region.

The Obama Administration's new National Security Strategy places an unprecedented emphasis on sanctions as an instrument of national power and has hit hard on President Omar al-Bashir's government in Khartoum.

The United States has also taken a very real human toll on some vulnerable groups unfortunate enough to be caught in the middle”

J. Peter Pham

"Irrespective of whether that assertion is true or not, it is clear from the case of KBCC and the breast cancer patients in Sudan that significant work needs to be done to ensure 'our sanctions will continue to be carefully designed and tailored to achieve clear aims while minimising any unintended consequences for other economic actors, the global economy, and civilian populations,'" Dr Pham said.

"Until the US Treasury Department's Office of Foreign Asset Control process is streamlined, communications with applicants and other stakeholders improved, and decision-making and response times cut, America's not-so-smart sanctions on Sudan will continue to extract an unacceptably high human cost for what is, at best, ambiguous strategic achievements," he said.

(J. Peter Pham is Director of the Africa Centre at the Atlantic Council)

MYSTERY | Speculation regarding Shekau's 'death' is rife among alliance members

Chadian president claims Boko Haram leader dead

He declares that the war will not last long after the setting up of regional force

BY EUGENE NDI
NATION Correspondent
in Yaounde

Chad's president, Idriss Deby Itno, has claimed that Aboubakar Shekau is no longer the leader of the Boko Haram jihadist group.

At a press conference on the occasion of the 55th anniversary of Tuesday of Chad's independence, President Deby said the Nigerian extremist group has a new leader.

He did not say what had happened to Abubakar Shekau, the declared leader of the group, but he said he had been replaced by a certain Mahamat Daoud who was ready to dialogue with the Nigerian government.

Speculation regarding Shekau's 'death' is rife amongst countries involved in the war against the extremist group.

This speculation is further heightened by the fact that the 'leader' of the group has not appeared in Boko Haram's videos of late.

"Boko Haram is decapitated. There are little groups (of Boko Haram members) scattered throughout east Nigeria, on the border with Cameroon. It is within our power to definitively overcome Boko Haram," President Deby said.

The Chadian leader even declared that the Boko Haram war will not last long after the setting up of the regional force headquartered in N'Djamena. "It will be over by the end of the year," he said.

The anniversary of independence Chad marked

Earlier, in March, President Deby had called on Shekau to surrender or be killed.

He claimed Chadian forces knew his hideout, and that if he refused to surrender, "he will suffer the same fate as his comrades."

While claiming progress in the fight against the jihadists, who have repeatedly hit border areas of Cameroon, Chad and Niger, and wrought havoc in northeast Nigeria, Deby admitted that suicide bombers still posed a threat.

In the past few weeks, suicide bombers, many of them women, have staged several attacks in Nigeria, Cameroon and Chad.

The challenge, Mr Deby said, was to "avoid terrorist acts and that's why we must organise at the regional level to prevent bomb-making materials and other explosives entering our countries."

Widows sue SA police over killing of 34 miners

BY PETER DUBE
NATION correspondent
in Pretoria

Widows of the 34 mine-workers shot dead by the police in Marikana in 2012 have filed a lawsuit against South Africa's police minister.

The widows filed the lawsuit in the North Gauteng High Court demanding compensation for loss of financial support of the deceased to their families, grief and emotional shock caused by death of their husbands.

The families are also demanding compensation for expenses that went to their psychological and psychiatric treatment and loss of family life and parental care.

A statement by their lawyers also said they were also demanding a formal apology from the minister.

"An apology will bring much needed closure to the families who feel they have been abandoned by the South African government," the statement said.

This week marks three years since the miners were killed within seven days during the Marikana mine wage strike in 2012.

The widows have previously suggested the matter be taken to the International Criminal Court, but that route was not taken.

Meanwhile, 270 miners who survived the Marikana killings are also preparing their court papers in a lawsuit against the police and their employer Lonmin Mine.

Their legal representative Andries Nkome said they had already served summons against the mine on behalf of seven miners who were injured during the strike.

Clinton surrender on emails

Spokesman

A thumb drive and a server containing copies of emails Hillary Clinton sent and received while US secretary of state will be handed over to the FBI, media reports said yesterday.

Mrs Clinton has been criticised for her decision to use a personal email server while secretary of state, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation has recently begun looking into the possibility that Clinton sent and received classified information from the server.

“It is her hope that State and the other agencies involved in the review process will sort out as quickly as possible which emails are appropriate to release to the public, and that the release will be as timely and transparent as possible,” Mrs Clinton campaign spokesman Nick Merrill told CBS News.

“She directed her team to give her email server that was used during her tenure as Secretary to the Department of Justice, as well as a thumb drive containing copies of her emails already provided to the State Department.”

Last month, the inspector general of the US intelligence community found that four emails sent through that server — in a sample of 40 of the 30,000 emails provided by Mrs Clinton — contained information that was classified when they were sent.

Earlier on Tuesday, the inspector general's office sent a letter to Senator Charles Grassley, head of the US Senate's Judiciary Committee, informing him that it had determined two of those four emails were, in fact, highly classified — meaning the information they contained was more secret than originally thought.

This determination appeared to trigger the handing over of the emails to the FBI Tuesday.

Mrs Clinton, frontrunner for the Democratic presidential nomination in 2016, has said she handled email through her personal servers for convenience.

Critics have painted the private email server as a way to keep critical information out of the public record.

“It may have been convenient for her, but it has been troubling at multiple levels for the rest of the country,” US Representative Trey Gowdy, head of the Select Committee on Benghazi, said in a statement.

The committee is investigating the 2012 Benghazi attacks and has taken interest in emails about the incident that may be on Clinton's server.

“Secretary Clinton's decision to prioritize her own convenience - and desire for control - over the security of our country's intelligence should concern all people of good conscience,” Republican Gowdy said.

The State Department has disputed whether the emails in question were classified at the time they were sent.

“Department employees circulated these emails on unclassified systems in 2009 and 2011 and ultimately some were forwarded to Secretary Clinton.

They were not marked as classified,” State Department spokesman John Kirby said Tuesday.

The thumb drive — also known as a USB flash drive — had been in the possession of Clinton's attorney, David Kendall.

It was turned over to the FBI after the agency determined he could not keep the classified information they are thought to contain, according to US media reports.

The server has previously been reported to have been wiped clean by Clinton. (AFP)

McDonald's sorry over 'don't feed homeless' directive

MARSEILLE, Wednesday

McDonald's France was forced to apologise Wednesday following the emergence of an internal note reportedly ordering staff not to hand out food to “tramps” at a restaurant on the swish Cote d'Azur.

The note was revealed on Twitter by consumer group “60 Million Consumers”.

“Following an incident on July 25, it is formally forbidden to give food to tramps,” says the note, which is signed by “the management”.

“As a reminder, staff meals must be eaten on the premises. Staff meals are a personal benefit and should only benefit the staff member in question,” the note continued.

“McDonald's is not here to feed all the hungry people in the country!” concluded the note.

The association cited on its website a McDonald's employee who said he had given some of his food to homeless people outside the restaurant last month.

“The smile of the people to whom I gave my meal was priceless,” the consumer group quoted the staff member as saying.

The fast-food chain responded in a statement: “After a serious incident with homeless people on the evening of July 25 in front of the McDonald's in Hyeres, the restaurant sent out a note to prevent these incidents and to ensure its clients' safety.” (AFP)

Unpaid UN intern quits after uproar

GENEVA, Wednesday

A young New Zealander today quit a prestigious but unpaid internship at the United Nations in Geneva after revelations he was sleeping in a tent to get by created uproar.

David Hyde, a 22-year-old with a degree in international relations, on Tuesday saw the story of his struggle to support himself in the pricey Swiss city while working for the UN splashed across the front page of a Swiss newspaper.

Pictures of him standing in an immaculate suit, UN entrance badge around his neck, next to a small, blue tent and rolled up foam mattress near the shores of Lake Geneva, caused outrage and an outpouring of offers of accommodation, according to the Tribune de Geneve, which broke the story.

But on Wednesday, Hyde, unshaven and wearing a rumpled shirt, stood in the glaring sun outside the gates to the UN's European headquarters and told a handful of journalists he had decided to resign. (AFP)

HEALTH

Ailing Thai king treated for 'water on the brain'

BANGKOK, Wednesday

Thailand's revered King Bhumibol Adulyadej has been treated for “water on the brain” and a chest infection, the palace revealed in a rare statement, amid public concern over the health of the world's longest serving monarch.

The 87-year-old king, who is perceived as a near-deity by many Thais, has been in Bangkok's Siriraj Hospital since being readmitted in May, but information on his condition has been scarce.

Doctors at the hospital have “reduced the level of water on his brain”, the Royal Household Bureau said in a statement on Monday. “During his stay at the Siriraj, he has had fever periodically and a raised heartbeat — assumed to be caused from an earlier lung infection,” it said, adding his heart rate had returned to normal after treatment. Fears over Thailand's future among competing elites as Bhumibol's reign enters its twilight years are seen as a motivating factor behind a decade of political turmoil in the kingdom.

Since 2006, the nation has witnessed two coups, the removal of three prime ministers by the courts and several rounds of street protests that have often ended in violence. (AFP)

China landslide leaves more than 60 missing

BEIJING, Wednesday

More than 60 people were missing in China today after a landslide buried the living quarters of a mining company under one million cubic metres of earth, state media said.

The landslide covered 15 employee dormitories and three houses in Shanyang county in the northern province of Shaanxi shortly after midnight, an official at the county's propaganda office told AFP.

The state-run Xinhua news agency, quoting the provincial government, said late Wednesday that more than 60 people remain missing.

It said four people had been rescued and rushed to hospital. Another 10 at the site had avoided being trapped when the landslide struck, it added.

Police, firefighters, mining rescuers and medical staff had been sent to the scene and residents in the area evacuated, the county government said in a statement.

Photos posted on news websites showed rescue workers in orange jumpsuits standing next to a pile of earth and rocks at least four times their size. Mechanical backhoes were atop the mound. (AFP)

Agony for motorists as roads levy pushes up fuel price by Sh3

Petrol, diesel will cost an extra Sh3 per litre starting tomorrow

@Edwincowino
edokoth@ke.nationmedia.com

Motorists are expected to dig deeper into their pockets from tomorrow as pump prices are set to go up. This is because the energy regulator wants a road maintenance levy.

Fuel prices will go up by Sh3 a litre for petrol and diesel from midnight on Friday, as the full burden of the government's road expansion plan begins to bite.

Last week, the acting director for petroleum, Mr Edward Kinyua, said the Energy Regulatory Commission had got a go-ahead from the taxman to charge an extra Sh3 for every litre of fuel. The money will be used to maintain roads.

"The consignments that came in from July 17, which is within our pricing window starting every tenth, will be affected by this levy. There will be no back-dating as previously alleged and we will compensate the importers who already paid the levy in the post-July 17 consignments," Mr Kinyua said.

Toll stations

The fact that importers already incurred the costs on some of the fuel already used implies that the compensation will come from higher pump prices that motorists must pay in the coming months.

In the 2015/16 Budget, a Sh3 road maintenance levy was proposed with effect from July 1. The Kenya Revenue Authority said the effective date for the new tax is July 17.

The additional levy comes at a time when the government is finalising plans to introduce toll stations on some major roads such as the southern by-pass, Mombasa-Nairobi highway and Thika Superhighway.

The strategy has been in the works since February last year, but has been criticised by lobby groups and consumers who insist that is double taxation.

The push to increase the charge on fuels started in December last year when the

Inflation

At the moment, the total tax per litre of petrol is about Sh30, diesel Sh20, and Sh2.20 on kerosene. In essence, the price of petrol, diesel and kerosene is almost the same before taxation, indicating how taxes distort market prices.

The consumer also pays Sh0.40 per litre to the Petroleum Development Fund. These taxes are usually in addition to 1.5 per cent railway development levy that is imposed on all imports.

The higher fuel cost from tomorrow is likely to have a ripple effect on inflation as both food and transport prices are likely to increase.

88,000 bags of fertiliser held by board, MPs told

BY NATION REPORTER

The National Cereals and Produce Board is keeping 88,000 bags of fertiliser in its depots around the country as it awaits a decision of the Kenya Bureau of Standards on whether or not to supply it to farmers.

The board was forced to put a freeze on the distribution of the fertiliser after questions were raised on an imported batch now detained at the Port of Mombasa.

Speaking after meeting the Agriculture Committee of the National Assembly in Nairobi, NCPB boss Newton Terer said Kebs had declared 372 bags out of a consignment of 42,272 bad.

The rest — 41,900 bags — was found to be fit for use.

Mr Terer had accompanied acting Agriculture Cabinet Secretary Adan Mohammed to a meeting with the committee, which has been investigating the fertiliser contract worth Sh6 billion.

"Kebs, on the suspicion of this moisture content being high, basically put a freeze on these (88,000) bags," Mr Mohammed told the Nation.

He said the board would now pursue insurance for the condemned fertiliser so that it can get refunds.

Moisture seeped into the 372 bags as the fertiliser was being shipped to Kenya and the insurance was being handled by the board.

Mr Mohammed said the ministry would now consider whether to have the NCPB pay for the insurance and the importer to meet the cost and shipping charges.

"It all depends on the cost of insurance and so we'll reflect on that and see. I think based on our experience of getting paid on this, we'll have to consider where we actually want the insurance to be and who will run with that," he said.

Investigating

The committee started investigating the matter after it was discovered that some of the fertiliser was bad.

The committee told the ministry to go ahead with the distribution of the fertiliser to farmers and said it had not at any point asked for it to be stopped.

"You are at liberty to continue with the procurement contract. Don't blame the committee when you are unable to execute this contract," said Mr Kareke Mbiuki, the committee's vice-chairman.

"Don't go and tell the farmers that we have stopped you. The committee has not placed any embargo on it, so don't blame us for your failures."

CfC Stanbic profit dips 42pc to Sh1.96bn

BY NATION CORRESPONDENT

Decreased trading income and instability in South Sudan have seen CfC Stanbic suffer a 42 per cent drop in after-tax profit. The bank recorded a Sh1.96 billion profit down from the Sh3.3 billion realised at the end of 2014.

The lender has attributed its half-year profit slump to decreased trading income driven by the rise in yields after the Central Bank mopped up cash from the market, hurting business.

The chaos in South Sudan also affected the performance of its subsidiary.

Loan book

CfC Stanbic Bank CEO Philip Odera said the group, however, continued to post growth in customer deposits and the loan book even as its stock brokerage arm, SBG Securities, increased its market share to 13.62 per cent from 13.24 per cent in the last quarter of 2014.

"Our business is still exhibiting healthy growth as evidenced by growth in customer deposits, loans and in total assets," Mr Odera said

Sh1.96bn

CfC Stanbic bank's hal-year after-tax profit, which is 42 per cent less than it recorded at the end of 2014 at an investor briefing yesterday in Nairobi.

Customer deposits grew by 18 per cent to Sh111 billion, while the lender's asset book expanded by 28 per cent to Sh100 billion.

Revenue, however, declined by eight per cent to Sh315 million for the period ending June 30, but the dip was less compared to the Sh343 million recorded in the same period last year.

The slump in equity and fixed income market for the period under review following the uncertainties in the implementation of capital gains tax and erosion of returns by a weakening shilling subdued the bank's performance.

Bancassurance

The bank is now planning to diversify revenue and business through digital platforms after upgrading its system in April and launching its mobile banking app last month.

It is also exploring investments in non-interest segments and plans to open more branches and enter the bancassurance sector.

"We received bancassurance agency approvals in July and we intend to launch the agency in the next few months," the CEO said.

Stanbic Insurance Agency will offer cover to CfC Stanbic customers and non-customers.

I am optimistic that we will be reporting double these numbers at the end of the year”

The bank said talks are underway to seek a Sh10 billion from the International Finance Corporation for onward lending to the Small and Medium Enterprises as well as the exports segment.

Big projects recipe for Kenya’s growth: study

About Sh5.6 trillion invested in roads, rail and energy since 2010 is set to pay dividend, says firm

BY JAMES KARIUKI
@kamaukariuki
kamaukariuki@gmail.com

Kenya’s journey to becoming a commercial centre in Africa is on the right track, thanks to the country’s investment in multi-billion-shilling projects. Global markets survey company Frost & Sullivan said that Kenya’s Sh5.6 trillion investment in roads, railways, airports and geothermal energy production in the past five years had caught the eye of multi-national investors. With more investments likely to be made this year in energy and telecommunications, the South African-based company said that the industry was the biggest winner. Kenya expects to start exporting oil in 2022. Frost & Sullivan economic consultant Craig Parker said mining, agriculture and retail segments stood to win big as transport costs continued to reduce due to falling crude prices as well as improved road networks. “Major road projects that are currently underway were established to alleviate the severe bottlenecks and traffic congestion in Kenya where an estimated Sh500 billion has been dedicated to roads in the past five years,” he said. However, the African Infrastructure Tracker report calls for urgent measures to address disputes over land acquisition along the proposed standard gauge railway route, saying high relocation costs and delays are escalating the costs of the giant investment. It also calls for the easing of the entry rules for multi-nationals seeking a share of the multi-billion tenders in Kenya. At the moment, tendering rules in Kenya limit the type of projects that international firms can get involved in.

“Although private participation in infrastructure development is growing and tender processes are becoming more transparent, forging local partnerships will remain crucial for entering the Kenyan market”
Frost & Sullivan’s economic consultant Craig Parker

Local partnerships
“Although private participation in infrastructure development is growing and tender processes are becoming more transparent, forging local partnerships will remain crucial for entering the Kenyan market,” said Mr Parker. The firm has also welcomed plans to give high priority to public-private partnership, saying it will boost the prospects of local construction companies and lenders. Frost & Sullivan has clients across the globe, who rely on its strategies for the 1,000 emerging businesses, public sector and the investment community.

Kenya-Re posts Sh1.5bn net profit

BY NATION CORRESPONDENT

Kenya-Reinsurance has posted a 20 per cent after-tax profit increase to Sh1.5 billion for the first six months of the year. “This good performance has been due to efficient claims management, new products and development,” the managing director, Mr Jadhiah Mwarania, said during an investor briefing in Nairobi, yesterday. Mr Mwarania said the company has business in Africa, the Middle East and Asia and has a dollar and a shilling count to hedge against currency swings. Gross premiums grew by 26 per cent, from Sh4.9 billion to Sh6.2 billion, while investment income increased by six per cent to Sh1.45 billion. The net claims incurred grew to Sh2.7 billion in line with the growth in business. He said cedant acquisition costs went up by 27 per cent to hit Sh1.61 billion, from Sh1.26 billion, in line with the growth of the premium written during the period under review. Operating expenses increased by nine per cent to Sh453 million. The company is scouting for new markets, said Mr Mwarania. “We are at advanced stage in setting up a subsidiary in Lusaka, Zambia to serve Zambia, Zimbabwe, Botswana, Lesotho, Namibia, Mozambique and Swaziland,” he said.

Appreciation

We, the family of Stephen Njoroge Githongo and Mary Wanjiku Njoroge of Mang'u, Nakuru County, wish to express our deep and sincere gratitude to all those who supported us spiritually, morally, materially and financially during the difficult and painful loss of our dear daughter Caroline Wangui Njoroge who until her demise was working with Co-operative Insurance Company (CIC) as a unit manager, Nakuru Branch.

Our heartfelt gratitude goes to the staff of CIC for their overwhelming support through prayers, contribution and presence. Our appreciation goes to Nakuru business fraternity for their selfless support and encouragements during the difficult time. We thank the World Overcomers Church led by Pastor Lee. Our special appreciation also goes to the fundraising and funeral organizing committee in Nakuru, Nairobi and Mang'u. We also thank our relatives, friends, neighbours, colleagues and various institutions for their support.

Since it is not possible to thank you individually, kindly accept this message as an expression of our sincere thanks. May the Lord Almighty, who sees all, bless you abundantly.

May the words of Mathew 5:4, "Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted" ring true in your hearts and minds forever, and may the Almighty God shower you with His blessings always. Amen.

Australia coach apologises for Ashes defeat

Lehmann vows they'll make amends in last Test after humiliating drubbing by hosts

Sydney

Australia's coach Darren Lehmann yesterday took responsibility for the crushing Ashes defeat to England, saying that his players were desperate to make amends in the final Test at The Oval.

Australia are 3-1 down in the series after a humiliating fourth Test drubbing by an innings and 78 runs at Trent Bridge when the tourists were bowled out for 60 before lunch on the first day.

"We have been poor, we have been outplayed by a superior opponent, and as coaching staff, players and selectors we fully accept the blame for our losses at Edgbaston and Trent Bridge," Lehmann said in a column for the Cricket Australia website.

"On behalf of our team I want to apologise for the manner in which we have lost, especially to those tour groups and individual fans who paid to travel to the UK to watch us and to the millions more tuning in at home."

Lehmann attacked the suggestion that the players' wives, partners and families who had accompanied them on this tour had somehow contributed to their lack of form on the field.

"We haven't performed"
"There's no question we haven't performed as we expected and we appreciate that in those circumstances we have to accept negative criticism from the media because we've had so much positive coverage during our success over the past two years," he said.
"And while we're happy to cop criticism for the way we bat, bowl, field or prepare I believe it's unfair to suggest having families with us as a reason for our on-field efforts." (AFP)

Indiza, Wakhu take early lead at KCB Tour

BY LARRY NGALA
ngala@ke.nationmedia.com

Mumias Golf Club's Dismas Indiza and his Royal Nairobi counterpart David Wakhu shared the first round lead at the par 73 Nakuru Golf Club course where the fourth leg of the KCB Golf Tour finally got under way yesterday.

Indiza and Wakhu shot four under par 69 each to lead John Wangai and Sullivan Muthugua by two shots. Wakhu, dropped an early shot at the second hole par four, but birdied the fifth, sixth and ninth to turn to the back nine with two under par.

He parred the first three holes at the back nine, birdied the long par five-13th, bogeyed the 145-yard-par three-15th, but birdied the 16th and 18th both par fives for two under par and the day's 69 to tie with Indiza.

Like Wakhu, Indiza dropped a shot at the second, but birdied the fourth, sixth and eighth, and the 13th, 16th and 18th holes.

"The course is currently in a fine condition and very easy for a low score if one stays on the fairway," said Indiza. Wangai and the Professional Golfers of Kenya (PGK) captain Muthugua shot 71 each while David Odhiambo of Nyanza and Royal's Eric Ooko fired one under par 72 each to stay within a reach of the leaders.

Windsor's David Opati was on his own at level par 73 as Limuru's James Karanja and Boniface Simwa from Eldoret tied on 74 and just a shot better than home pro Richard Ainley, Muthaiga's Anil Shah and Simon Ngige from Thika Sports Club.

The second round which will also decide on the top 12 qualifiers who will be battling it out on Friday and Saturday for the million shillings purse, is set for this morning from 9am.

Meanwhile, the shock that Martin Kaymer felt as he hoisted his first major trophy at the PGA Championship at Whistling Straits five years ago heralded a tough adjustment to a new status as a sports star. Kaymer, then 25, outlasted Bubba Watson in a three-hole aggregate playoff to become the first German after Bernhard Langer to win one of golf's four major titles.

"I don't even know if you're happy at that moment, because you're so in shock," Kaymer recalled yesterday, as he prepared to tee it up again in the 97th PGA Championship at Whistling Straits.

Djokovic starts US Open build-up with Montreal win

Montreal

Top-ranked Novak Djokovic began his preparation for the US Open by defeating Thomaz Bellucci 6-3, 7-6 (7/4) on Tuesday, advancing to the third round of the ATP Montreal Masters.

But there was no luck with the weather for Andy Murray, with the British second seed forced off court at 4-4 against Spain's Tommy Robredo when rain struck less than an hour before midnight, postponing the finish of the contest until yesterday.

Serbian top seed Djokovic made his first appearance since winning Wimbledon more than a month ago. He also created a bit of personal history with his 250th win at the Masters 1,000 level.

Djokovic is riding a win streak in the elite series, winning the last five he has contested dating to Paris Bercy last November. He remains undefeated in his last 27 matches at the Masters.

Djokovic will now wait for a winner from American Jack Sock and 14th seed Grigor Dimitrov. Sock beat Adrian Mannarino 6-2, 2-6, 7-6 (7/5) while Dimitrov eliminated Alexandr Dolgoplov 6-4, 7-5.

"It was a very intense match for both players," Djokovic said of his fourth win over Bellucci and his first on hardcourt in the series. "There was a lot of tension and a very high quality."

"I managed to stay cool and mentally tough in the right moment. That's what I take out of this match — the ability to play my best and stay calm in the right moments and overcome this tough challenge." (AFP)

Fast bowlers Mitchell Johnson and Josh Hazlewood are also being rested.

British track great Coe ready for Gatlin fall-out at Worlds

London

British track great Sebastian Coe has said he will be prepared to present Justin Gatlin with a gold medal if the controversial American wins the 100 metres final at this month's World Championships in Beijing.

Last week Coe (left), a candidate for the presidency of the International Association of Athletics Federations (IAAF) hit out at fresh allegations that officials had not done enough in the fight against doping, saying they were a "declaration of war" on the sport. But although personally in favour of life bans for dope cheats, Coe, currently an IAAF vice-president, said he and his fellow officials would have little choice but to present Gatlin, twice found guilty of taking banned substances, with gold if he wins the blue riband event on August 23.

It is a prospect that has created a sense of dread among many athletics insiders, particularly if Gatlin beats sprint great Usain Bolt in the process. The Jamaican, who has a clean doping record, is arguably the greatest athlete of his era and certainly the one with the biggest worldwide fan base.

Since winning the 100m and 200m finals in world record time at the 2008 Beijing Olympics, only a false start in the 100m at the 2011 World Championships in Dagu has prevented Bolt from a clean sweep of sprint titles at four major global meetings.

Coe, the Olympic 1500m champion at both the 1980 and 1984 Games is standing against Ukrainian former pole-vault star Sergey Bubka in the race to succeed Lamine Diack as IAAF president, with an election scheduled for August 19. "I was always in favour of a life ban. I realise that train has left the station for all sorts of legal reasons," Coe said yesterday. (AFP)

ATHLETICS | Most of them have since retired

IAAF suspends 28 athletes from 2005/07 champs

Paris

The IAAF has provisionally suspended 28 athletes for suspected doping offences at the 2005 and 2007 World Championships in Helsinki and Osaka, world athletics' governing body announced on Tuesday.

Most of the athletes concerned have since retired and none are competing at the 2015 World Championships due August 22 in Beijing, the IAAF stated.

A total of 32 rogue results from the two championships were uncovered after re-examination of urine samples stored at a World Anti-Doping Agency accredited laboratory (LAD) in Lausanne, Switzerland.

"The latest scientific breakthroughs in anti-doping technology and analysis have been employed in the re-analysis of these samples to allow us to find previously undetectable substances," explained LAD director Martial Saugy.

The IAAF said re-testing of the 2005 and 2007 samples had nothing to do with the recent accusations of mass doping in athletics.

"The re-analysis of these samples has been ongoing for some time, and was commenced well before the most recent allegations made against the IAAF by (German broadcaster) the ARD and The Sunday Times," the IAAF stated.

However, the athletes suspected of being caught out by advances in doping technology cannot be named for legal reasons but the IAAF revealed: "A large majority of the 28 are retired, some are athletes who have already been sanctioned, and only very few remain active in sport."

"The IAAF is provisionally suspending them and can confirm that none of the athletes concerned will be competing in Beijing."

Athletics' rulers have vehemently denied any negligence in its testing procedure in the wake of the claims by ARD and The Sunday Times of hundreds of allegedly suspicious blood tests. In its statement on Tuesday, the IAAF said the long-term storage and re-analysis of samples remained "one of the best tools available" to detect cheats using previously undetectable substances.

It added: "The IAAF does not shy away from the fact that some athletes continue to cheat and defraud their fellow competitors."

"But we will do everything in our power, and use every tool available, to protect those clean athletes who form the large majority of our sport." (AFP)

Mombasa marathon's increased prize money to attract big names

BY ABDULRAHMAN SHERIFF
asheriff@ke.nationmedia.com

Organisers of the Mombasa International Marathon expect increased entry, including top athletes from Ethiopia, due to improved winners' package in this year's event.

Each winner in the men's and women's 42km race will pocket

Sh1.5 million, up from Sh200,000 from the previous years, while winners of 10km category will get Sh750,000, up from last year's Sh50,000.

Speaking at Treasury Square Gardens during the launch of the 36th edition of the event yesterday, Mombasa County governor Ali Hassan Joho said they expect the increased prize money to attract more competitors. "We have invited top marathoners from Ethiopia, Uganda, Tanzania and Kenya to participate and we are sure they will come because we have raised the winner's package from Sh200,000 to Sh1.5 million," said Joho.

"We have raised the prize money purposely to attract the best runners from other countries in the region.

"We expect a record 5,000 runners to participate in the event."

Mombasa County sports minister Mohammed Abbas said the county government will use the event set for September 27 to boost the local economy, adding that they injected Sh15 million for that purpose.

Let's get over this doping scam by naming culprits

I have been evading the subject of doping for too long now and I think it is about that time I offered my two-cent opinion on the topic.

For the country to move forward, we must first admit that doping here in Kenya is real but the only problem are the figures being thrown here and there.

While we agree that there is a problem to deal with here, that generalisation of Kenyan athletes is to say the least disgusting. Besides, the timing especially of the current episode is suspect, coming just before the World Championships in Beijing.

We have been told that 32 medal winners at the world's six top city marathons were among the hundreds of long distance runners with suspicious blood test results.

We have also been told that the data shows that between 2001 and 2012 a third of Olympic and world championship endurance and middle distance running medals had been won by athletes who, at some point in their careers, had given a suspicious blood test.

According to the Sunday Times, many of the suspect runners had also won medals in the six most prestigious city marathons thus — in Berlin, Boston, Chicago, London, New York and Tokyo. Subsequently, IAAF have initiated disciplinary action against 28 athletes after they retested samples from the 2005 and 2007 world championships with new technology that can uncover previously undetectable substances and found 32 adverse doping cases.

I support the findings fully as the world seeks to clean the sport but the fact that no names are being released is making our athletes very unsettled.

Athletics Kenya has taken the biggest flak of the alleged increase in doping in the country but I think this is more of a national disaster than just a federation's issue. What is the point of resurrecting cases which happened over seven years ago just before the global show?

Most of the people we are talking about have since retired and punishing them now won't make much difference. We need to deal with this situation now and work towards eliminating the wheat from the chaff otherwise we will still be talking about the same thing 20 years down the line.

The anti-doping protocols need to be changed to hasten the testing protocol. What is happening is not good for the sport and equally bad for the athletes. Why has it taken long to name and shame the victims yet WADA and IAAF have all the machinery?

It is one thing to play politics in the doping subject and it is another to be committed to eliminating the vice. In Kenya, we need an effective local anti-doping agency. The legality of Kenyan National Anti-doping Agency appointed by the Sports Cabinet Secretary has been challenged in court, hence the country will have to wait a bit longer.

Besides, doping needs to be made a crime in Kenya. Let us be told who is clean and who is not for us to move forward.

Tikolo's charges begin preparations for Africa T20 Cup

BY RICHARD MWANGI
rmwangi@ke.nationmedia.com

The national cricket team will take part in a two-day 90-over matches against an emerging side at the Rurarak Sports Club starting today as part of its preparations for the inaugural Africa Twenty20 Cup set for South Africa from September 4 to October 4.

Cricket South Africa (CSA) invited Kenya, Zimbabwe and Namibia to take part in the tournament which they are using as the curtain raiser to the 2015-16 season. The other participants will be the 12 CSA affiliates as well as Associate Member, KZN Inland. The organisers said that the tournament will take the World Cup format, with winners of the four Groups advancing to the semi-finals.

Easterns (Sahara Willowmoore Park), North West (Senwes Park), Griquas (Diamond Oval) and Free State (Mangaung Oval) will be the venues for the Group matches.

Kenya's national team coach, Steve Tikolo (left), yesterday said they are happy with the invite as the longer version of the game improves both bowlers and batsmen.

"We expect to do well in South Africa. The players have put behind the poor performance in the World Twenty20 qualifiers in Scotland that cost us a place in next year's World Twenty20 in India," said Tikolo.

The coach also confirmed that James Ngoche, who was banned from bowling in international matches, will not be part of the squad.

"We do not want to expose him before he is cleared" said Tikolo.

All Franchise players will play for the province at which they are contracted although a limit of four has been placed on the number to be fielded at the same time. This limit though will not include the contracted Proteas players who are restricted to one in the starting XI.

Kenya takes rugby to the region

Kenyan schools aim to clinch 15s and Sevens crowns in Rwanda

BY BRIAN YONGA
byonga@ke.nationmedia.com

Kenya's 15s rugby representatives to the Brookside East African Secondary Schools Games will be out to extend the country's dominance in the regional games which get under way in Huye, Rwanda, this Sunday.

The country will also be aiming at staging a sweep of the top two medals in Sevens rugby which will make its debut at this year's edition.

The country has dominated the 15s rugby since the inception of the games.

Holders Maseno School and national champions Laiser Hill will lead Kenya's attack in rugby 15s while National secondary schools boys' rugby sevens champions St Peters Mumias and runners-up Kangaru High will fly the country's flag in the shorter version of the game.

Maseno, who defeated Uganda's

SULEIMAN MBATIAH | NATION

Laiser Hill rugby players celebrate their victory against Maseno School in the final match of the Kenya Secondary Schools Sports Association Term One games at Nakuru High School on April 18.

Hanna Mixed 12-3 to win the title in Dar es Salaam last year, will start as favourites to retain the crown but will face stiff competition from Laiser.

Maseno coach Gilbert Onyango however expects his team to go for nothing short of the title.

"We are the defending champions and everyone will look upon us to excel. We ready for the competition especially from Laiser Hill, who we know will be our toughest challengers," Onyango told Nation Sport.

Laiser will be looking to complete a double following their exploits in Nakuru and their coach, Kevin Wambua believes his team has the right ingredients to be crowned regional champions for the first time.

Tough competition

"It has been a good year for us. We won our first national title and we have the chance to claim gold in the regional games," Wambua said. The two Kenyan schools will be up against last year's finalists Hanna Mixed, St Mary's Kisubi and Namliyangi all from Uganda as well as Burundi's EPTM.

Kenyan champions St Peters have vowed to make history by lifting the inaugural title but are wary of Ugandan opposition.

"Every team will want to get their hands on the title and this will make the competition very tough. We therefore need to be on top of our game if we want to be crowned champions," said St Peters assistant coach Eric Chebutala. Both rugby sevens and 15s matches will be played at the TTC Save grounds during the week-long showpiece.

KBF challenged to improve local basketball standards

BY RONNIE EVANS
rodhiambo@ke.nationmedia.com

The Kenya Basketball Federation has been asked to do more to help improve the standards of the game in the country as well as nurture talent.

Speaking on Tuesday after a team of American basketball coaches from the Giant of Africa (GOA) concluded their two-day tour of the country, NBA-franchise Denver Nuggets assistant coach Patrick Mutombo challenged KBF to do more to ensure the sport continues to grow.

"Every time we have an opportunity, we share ideas with others. We are teachers first and coaches second who are looking beyond basketball," Mutombo said.

The local leagues have been improving over the past few years despite facing numerous setbacks, but the NBA coach is of the view that the local federation needs to do more if the country is to realise its full potential in the sport.

"We have a collective responsibility to the continent to grow and develop the sport. The local federation has to do more for the players," he said.

Mutombo said that more facilities needed to be put up to help the players compete with others in the continent.

"We all have to find a way to study the game and improve," the visiting NBA coach said.

Delayed fixtures

The basketball league took the format that mirrors the American NBA league this season with the introduction of the split Western and Eastern conferences that moved from the traditional unified league. The new format has been widely criticised by players and officials largely due to the delay in matches and late release of fixtures with some teams going for up to three weeks without playing a single match.

Another major challenge that the game in Kenya is facing is lack of sponsorship for the local clubs. A good number of teams in the top leagues often struggle to not only honour matches but also pay the required league fees.

National teams for junior golf events selected

BY LARRY NGALA
lngala@ke.nationmedia.com

The Junior Golf Foundation (JGF) has named the two teams that will represent Kenya in the All Africa Junior Girls championship and the Tri-Nations Boys Tournament to be held at Nyali Golf and Country Club from August 18-23.

Four girls will represent the country in the inaugural All Africa Girls Championship, three of whom flew back home this week from Harare Zimbabwe where Kenya retained the triangular Giberson and Page Trophy.

Agnes Nyakio (18) from Golf Park, Naomi Wafula (17) of Muthaiga Golf Club, 15-year-old Kellie Gachaga also from Muthaiga and debutant Sarah Khanyerereri (17), from Royal Nairobi will compete in the five-nation tourney.

Both Nyakio and Gachaga are playing off handicap six while Wafula is the lowest at handicap two and Khanyerereri is off 10. Uganda, Zimbabwe, Zambia, Nigeria and hosts Kenya are the only countries remaining in the girls' event after the last minute withdrawal of Egypt and Tunisia.

The boys' team for the Tri-Nations Tournament between Kenya, Zimbabwe and Nigeria is made up of juniors from Nyali Golf and Country Club save for the 15-year-old Akshay Chandaria of Windsor Golf Hotel and Country Club.

The Nyali players include Coast Open champion Mathew Wahome now playing off scratch, Adel Balala (16), Tahir Mohammed (16) both playing off four, Agil Is-Haq (15) also playing off four, and new-comer Temi Katembo (17), who is currently playing off handicap five.

The two teams are expected to assemble early next week for training after the on-going Junior Matchplay Championship at Sigona Golf Club.

Meanwhile, Tanzania's Madina Idd walked away with the Mombasa Cup during this year's Ladies Coast Open at the nine-hole Mombasa Golf Club course.

Madina posted 80 gross to claim the Silver Division in the Golfer of The Year event where she won by six shots from Eldoret's Esther Chumo and nine shots from third-placed Esther Karuga of Nakuru.

Josephine Koech took the nett title with 75 nett, winning ahead of Wanjira Kireri of Karen on 80 after beating Susan Kanyora on countback. The bronze title went to N. Gachoya on 101, one shot better than Mary Kandu while Joyce Kamau finished third on 106. The nett title went to Caroline Mokaya on 75 nett, and in second place was R. Wainaina on 77. During the Mixed Greensomes, the pair of Jennifer Ngure and David Ngunjiri posted 39 points to win ahead of Naomi Joseph and Sammy Mulama on 38 after a countback with Florence Karimi and Gurbux Singh.

Irene Brooker and Amos Kamau won the first nine on 19 and Esther Karuga claimed the second also on 19 points. During the second leg of the week-long Ladies Coast Open at Vipingo Ridge's Baobab course, Cheryl Bush posted 36 points to win the Silver Division where Wanjira Kireri on 35 was second.

Pedro future overshadows Barca’s Super Cup win

London

Barcelona can take a big step towards a fifth trophy in 2015 when they face Athletic Bilbao in the Spanish Super Cup tomorrow, just three days after sealing the Uefa Super Cup with a remarkable 5-4 extra-time win over Sevilla.

Pedro Rodriguez proved to be the unlikely hero for the Catalans as the wantaway winger came off the bench to smash home the winner with five minutes left in extra time after Barca had conspired to throw away a 4-1 second-half lead.

“When you know that you could leave, it is a complicated situation,” said Pedro. “I was very angry to have not played (from the start) because I have always tried to be professional and go out to help the team.” And he also hit back at Barca technical secretary Robert Fernandez for claiming that he asked to leave the club, citing that statement as “unfortunate”.

Pedro’s opportunities have been limited since the arrival of Luis Suarez last season to join Lionel Messi and Neymar in attack.

However, even without Neymar due to a bout of the mumps, coach Luis Enrique opted for Rafinha and was rewarded as he scored after Messi had fired in two brilliant free kicks to cancel out Ever Banega’s opener for Sevilla.

Suarez then made it 4-1 early in the second-half but, remarkably, Sevilla produced a stunning fightback as goals from Jose Antonio Reyes, Kevin Gameiro and Yevhen Konoplyanka took the game into extra time.

And Javier Mascherano admitted that Barca have plenty to work on ahead of the upcoming two legs against Athletic if they are to add the Spanish Super Cup to their trophy haul. (AFP)

KENYAN PREMIER LEAGUE | Gor Mahia move to 52 points on top of log

Wafula and Agwanda on target as runaway leaders see off battling Ushuru at City Stadium

BY ISAAC SWILA
iswila@ke.nationmedia.com

Enoch Agwanda came off the bench to help Gor Mahia secure a laboured 2-0 win over Ushuru in a Kenyan Premier League match at the Nairobi City Stadium yesterday.

The stocky forward, who has found it hard to secure a first team role in the team, was summoned by coach Frank Nuttall with 25 minutes to go for Godfrey Walusimbi.

Agwanda made an immediate impact winning a penalty after being upended in the box by Ushuru custodian Samuel Odhiambo. He would pick himself up to convert the spot kick to wrap up the match for the run-away league leaders. Earlier in the match, winger Innocent

K’Ogalo’s latest victory comes just three days after the defending champions resumed their title quest with a 6-1 thrashing of Kenya Commercial Bank.

Fatigue was however evident within K’Ogalo’s rank as they struggled to find their rhythm.

Missed opportunity
The team has had little to recover from their campaign at the just concluded Cecafa Club Championships in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania where they finished runners up.

The match did not go well for us. We made mistakes which proved costly and that was the difference”

Ken Kenyatta, Ushuru FC coach

Kenyatta’s team deployed long and high balls which seemed to keep Gor Mahia at bay for the better part of the first half.

Gor Mahia’s lead striker Michael Olunga missed a good opportunity to put his team head within the first three minutes of play. Moments later, Olunga atoned for his sin by picking out Wafula with a neat delivery that the latter expertly turned in for the opening goal.

After the opening goal, the match degenerated into a scrappy affair with each side struggling to keep possession.

After the interval, Ushuru coach Ken Kenyatta brought in Edwin Misiko and Charles Okwemba for Barack Odhiambo and Muhammad Hassan in an effort to unlock K’Ogalo’s defence and salvage something from the match.

But try as they may, Ushuru could not find their way past a Gor Mahia side that lacked fluency.

“The match did not go well for us. We made mistakes which proved costly and that was the difference,” Kenyatta said after the match. For Gor Mahia, the victory came with three important points and extended their unbeaten run in the league to 20 matches.

Valbuena returns to France, signs for Lyon

France international playmaker Mathieu Valbuena, 30, has signed for Lyon just a year after moving to Russia, the French Ligue 1 club said on Tuesday.

He left Marseille 12 months ago for Dynamo Moscow for seven million euros ($7.75 million) on a three-year deal but now he is back in his homeland as he bids to win a place in the France squad for Euro 2016.

Valbuena has signed a three-year deal worth five million euros ($5.5 million) with Lyon, who won the last of their consecutive seven-time French league titles in 2008.

The player passed a medical in Lyon on Tuesday morning and was later officially unveiled.

Shaqiri joins Stoke in club-record £12m deal

Swiss attacking midfielder Xherdan Shaqiri has joined Stoke City from Inter Milan for a club-record fee of $18.7 million, the Premier League club announced on Tuesday.

The transfer of the 23-year-old Switzerland international eclipses the fee of around £10 million that Stoke paid Tottenham Hotspur to sign Peter Crouch in 2011. He only joined Inter from Bayern Munich in January but has signed a five-year contract at the Britannia Stadium.

“He’s a dynamic and explosive player who will bring something different to the group and at the age of 23 he still has a great deal of potential,” Stoke manager Mark Hughes told the club website.

Topal, 29, was travelling home from the club’s training facility when unknown assailants shot at his car in the Asian side of Istanbul, Fenerbahce said in a statement. It said that Topal, who appeared to have been driving himself, escaped unhurt because his car was bullet-proof.

Boateng believes in Bayern’s Euro chances

Bayern Munich’s Germany centre-back Jerome Boateng believes the Bundesliga giants have the ability to win the Champions League this season.

Boateng, 26, was part of the last Bayern side to lift Europe’s premier club crown in 2013 when they completed a treble after their Bundesliga and German Cup victories.

“We have the potential to win the Champions League as well as the other competitions,” he told the Sport1 television station’s website.

“Obviously, we should and we want to win every match, but there are other very good teams in England, France and Italy, and it’s always a close battle,” he added, seemingly forgetting the power of La Liga and the last two European champions: Real Madrid and Barcelona.

United legend Schmeichel despairs of De Gea impasse

Munich

Manchester United goalkeeping great Peter Schmeichel believes mistakes have been made regarding the contract stand-off involving David De Gea (left).

De Gea has been linked with a move to Spanish giants Real Madrid but United are reportedly holding out for defender Sergio Ramos in an exchange deal with the 10-time European champions.

The stand-off saw De Gea watch from the stands as United began their season with a 1-0 win over Tottenham Hotspur on Saturday. United manager Louis van Gaal selected Sergio Romero instead of De Gea, with Schmeichel saying the player’s future should have been sorted before the season started.

“If the player is not happy, his agent, himself and the club that want him should have sorted this a long time ago,” Schmeichel told talkSPORT radio on Tuesday. “It’s sad that it’s dragged into the season.”

Schmeichel, who won the Premier League five times during his eight-year spell at Old Trafford, added: “I’d really like De Gea to stay.

“Two years running he’s been player of the year. You don’t let players like that go but if he wants to go, let him go and let Manchester United move on.”

De Gea has been included in United’s Champions League squad for the two-legged play-off against Club Brugge.

But even if he appeared in either of the matches — scheduled for August 18 and August 26 — he would be eligible to represent another club in the group stages of the competition this season, according to UEFA rules. (AFP)

Chelsea axes doctor in injury row

Carneiro fell foul of the Blues manager after she ran into the pitch to treat Hazard

London

Chelsea have sidelined team doctor Eva Carneiro from match-day duties after she fell foul of manager Jose Mourinho, according to British media reports on Tuesday.

Mourinho criticised Carneiro after she ran into the pitch to treat Eden Hazard in stoppage time of Chelsea’s 2-2 draw at home to Swansea City on Saturday, saying she did not “understand the game”.

After receiving support from fans, Carneiro wrote on her Facebook page: “I would like to thank the general public for their overwhelming support. Really very much appreciated.”

The Daily Telegraph and Daily Mail said while Carneiro would continue in her role as first-team doctor she would no longer attend games or training sessions or enter the team hotel. Mourinho felt that she had been wrong to go to Hazard’s aid as his side pushed for a winner against Swansea at Stamford Bridge.

“I wasn’t happy with my medical staff because, even if you are a medical doctor or secretary on the bench, you have to understand the game,” the Portuguese told reporters after the match. “If you go to the pitch to assist a player, then you must be sure that a player has a serious problem.

“I was sure that Eden didn’t have a serious problem. He had a knock and was very tired. My medical department left me with eight fit outfield players in a counter-attack after a set-piece and we were worried we didn’t have enough players left.”

Carneiro joined Chelsea in February 2009 and was promoted to the role of first-team doctor and assistant medical director by Andre Villas-Boas, one of Mourinho’s predecessors, in 2011. The Telegraph and the Mail said her role had been changed as part of a shake-up of back-room staff by Mourinho.

Meanwhile, goalkeeper Thibaut Courtois will miss Chelsea’s trip to Premier League title rivals Manchester City on Sunday after the Football Association on Tuesday upheld his dismissal against Swansea City.

Chelsea made a claim of wrongful dismissal after the Belgium international was sent off for felling Bafetimbi Gomis on the edge of the area during his side’s 2-2 draw with the Welsh club on Saturday. But the FA found there were no grounds to overturn the decision, meaning Asmir Begovic will step in for Courtois at the Etihad Stadium.

“A claim of wrongful dismissal submitted by Chelsea in relation to Thibaut Courtois has been unsuccessful following an Independent Regulatory Commission hearing earlier today (Tuesday),” the FA said in a statement. “The goalkeeper was dismissed for denying an obvious goal-scoring opportunity in the 52nd minute of Chelsea’s game against Swansea City at Stamford Bridge on Saturday (8 August 2015).

Zurich

Fifa on Tuesday appointed Swiss lawyer Francois Carrard, who helped restore the Olympic movement’s credibility after the Salt Lake City scandal, to lead the world football governing body’s Reform Committee.

Carrard, 77, previously guided the International Olympic Committee through its own governance reforms in the wake of the bribery scandal-hit Winter Olympics of 2002.

Fifa is reeling from its own corruption turmoil after seven football officials were arrested in a raid on a Zurich hotel on the eve of a Fifa congress in May.

“It is vital for the future of global football to restore the integrity and reputation of its governing body,” Carrard told a tele-conference call. “It’s a very significant crisis, on a par with what I came across at the IOC between 1998 to 2000.

“Once again, we have accusations of corruption, structural reforms to put in place, interference from the political world and sponsors.

“There are similarities (with the Olympics), even if the situations are different and that the world has changed in the past 15 years.”

He said he had accepted Fifa’s call to help as he considered it “important to find reforms which are acceptable to all to restore Fifa’s credibility”. He said: “I’ve got this experience of already having sporting crises to manage.”

Carrard was appointed following consultation with the six football confederations and he will be assisted by representatives from two of each.

“As the independent chairman, I am committed to delivering the necessary package of credible reforms, working with representatives from within football and wider society.” (AFP)

SAFARICOM | State agencies undecided over splitting firm's services

We'll fight you, Matiang'i told

Airtel has the backing of Parliament and Matiang'i while Safaricom is supported by attorney-general

BY LILIAN OCHIENG

@LilianMerab

laochieng@ke.nationmedia.com

Any bid to clip the wings of Safaricom by saying it dominates the market will be vigorously opposed by the Competitions Authority.

The Communication Authority of Kenya is championing the bid to declare Safaricom dominant backed by the Ministry of Information.

But the competition agency said the rules were ill-conceived and not reflective of international practices.

Competition authority director-general Wang'ombe Kariuki yesterday said the communications authority needs to understand the competition laws of dominance.

He urged cabinet secretaries meddling in the issue to focus on policy and let regulators control the market.

The competition authority has been sidelined on the anti-Safaricom moves being pushed by the Communications Cabinet Secretary Fred Matiang'i.

"If there is any conflict, disharmony or inconsistency, the determination, directives, regulations, rules, orders and decisions of the authority shall prevail," Mr Kariuki said.

Communications Cabinet Secretary Fred Matiang'i

An agreement signed by the two regulatory agencies shows that both should collaborate in the preparation of legislative proposals and regulations that are likely to affect the level of competition in the communications markets.

If there is any conflict, disharmony or inconsistency, the regulations of the authority shall prevail”

Wang'ombe Kariuki

The Competition Authority stand reinforces a July 9 letter by Attorney-General Githu Muigai to Dr Matiang'i who advised the Cabinet Secretary to withdraw the regulations from the National Assembly and have them discussed by the two agencies.

Nonetheless, communications authority director-general Francis Wangusi, insisted that the competition watchdog was not a regulator over telcos. He said he would push through the dominance regulations despite Prof Githu's advice.

Mr Kariuki hopes that when the regulations land in parliament, they would be directed to the communications authority under the law that compels the House to seek expert opinion.

His comments come at a time when Health Cabinet Secretary James Macharia has been drawn into the dominance mix. Mr Macharia said at a Safaricom event on Tuesday that Dr Matiang'i was unfair in the bid to declare Safaricom dominant and eventually punish it.

Airtel seems to be successful in lobbying parliament and communications Ministry to declare Safaricom dominant.

In the battle, Safaricom is supported by Mr Macharia and Airtel has support from parliament and Dr Matiang'i.

If passed by Parliament, the regulations would declare Safaricom dominant, split its M-Pesa, voice and data businesses and put price caps on its services.

Mr Wangusi however insists that the regulations do not target the telecoms only.

Mr Kariuki is of the view that concentration on the telecoms and the manner in which he has been sidelined in decision-making is suspicious.

He wants the competitions authority to prove through a study if the regulations are focused on benefiting consumers or rival firms.

He said that splitting M-pesa and introducing price caps on it will render it powerless as other mobile money firms close in.

Barren riverbeds, boiling tempers

As sand harvesters exploit the last of remaining streams in Machakos to supply Nairobi developers, residents have begun picketing to preserve their fragile eco-systems. That can only lead to one thing: your lorryload of shingle is about to get dearer

Kihiru Mwiri members stage a protest in Nairobi last month

Surveyors propose audit of land companies:

Surveyors have proposed an audit of land buying companies in the country following the killing of eight directors of Kihiru Mwiri Land Buying Company in Murang'a. The Institution of Surveyors of Kenya (ISK) last week said the disregard for due process by leaders in the land buying companies has seen the firms become dangerous investment vehicles. They now want the government to establish who owns the lands, those who have been allocated plots, and also vet the leadership of the companies. Two weeks ago, two directors of Kihiru Mwiri were shot dead, bringing the number of murdered officials to eight in less than two years. Four other officials are missing. Most of the companies are plagued with leadership wrangles and malpractices, including double and triple allocation of the same plot.

KCB separates mortgages from banking business:

KCB is set to separate its mortgage arm S&L from its banking business as it looks to enter the construction sector. The subsidiary will operate much in the same way as Housing Finance's Kenya Building Society. S&L will be looking to build cheaper houses targeting the middle class. It is targeting 10,000 houses in the next three years. The bank hopes to ride on technology to build houses priced between Sh1 million and Sh3 million. The average size of mortgages in the country is Sh7.5 million, making it difficult for majority of Kenyans to own homes financed by banks. KCB will provide mortgage financing for those who buy the houses built by S&L, which originally operated as a separate unit but was in 2009 absorbed by the bank and turned into a department. The new-look S&L will have its own capital and partners.

Nairobi was built with Machakos sand, but that is about to change

As the capital opens its bowels to swallow even more building materials, demand for construction shingle and gravel is at an all-time high. Lorries are making the beeline towards the traditional sand harvesting grounds of Ukambani, where they are meeting an increasingly hostile community... and an even more inimical local regulatory framework

BY BERNARDINE MUTANU

There is an old saying that the Isuzu TXD truck of the 1970s and '80s built Nairobi. While this might have been a marketing coinage of a creative genius at General Motors, it cannot be off the mark by much. Were we, however, to use the same marketing line, we would not be attempting to sell anything if we said Machakos built Nairobi. Sand from Machakos built the capital, to be specific.

That statement rings true because those ubiquitous Isuzu trucks credited with building the capital would not have acquired that fame were it not for the cargo they ferried, which had been scooped from the riverbeds of the larger Ukambani.

Payload by payload, the trucks have transported millions of tonnes of sand from this generally dry region to the capital over the years. But that is about to change as residents start feeling the combined effects of climate change and drying river beds.

At Makiliva village, a small settlement in Mwala, Anna Morris is a troubled woman. She cannot find water for her livestock here, and so she is forced to trek tens of kilometres in search of the precious commodity every day. The situation is getting worse by the year, and she blames it on the exploitation of the rivers here for commercial purposes.

All the sand in the rivers and streams of Makiliva has been transported to Nairobi and Machakos to build glistening towers, and so when it rains the rivers cannot retain the water, which then rushes downstream, eroding the streams and rivers further and leaving Anna and her cows even thirstier.

"My wish is for the government to completely outlaw sand harvesting here," she told DN2 recently.

The Machakos county government has already passed the Sand Harvesting Act, 2014 to regulate the exploitation of river beds for building materials, but the law seems not have been a deterrent enough for business people.

Last month residents of Wendano in Ekalakala, Masinga demonstrated against sand harvesting in the area, saying the business had not only destroyed their rivers, but their families too as children were dropping out of school to be employed as casual labourers in the harvesting fields.

A few kilometres away in Mwala, River Nditha, preferred by Nairobi merchants for its pristine sand, long lost its glory, even though trucks still line its beds to scoop whatever they can.

Anna is adamant that the harvesting has to stop, but developers do not have any other alternative to sand, and so the demand remains high.

As Machakos County restricts the business, sand hauliers are going as far as Enziu, a small shopping centre about 30 kilometres from Mwingi town on the road to Garissa, to harvest sand. Others are looking towards Narok and Kajiado for the same.

According to National Environment Management Authority (Nema) regulations, sand harvesters must be licensed by the authority. However, there are fears that some harvesters might not have the requisite documentation, or may have forged the same.

Also, there are concerns that Nema is not adequately policing this important area, which explains why riverbeds have been so exploited that they cannot support even small ecosystems, let alone larger farming communities.

Nema, also, is mandated with the responsibility of designating particular rivers for sand

City Hall fights compensation of Embakasi railway evictees:

City Hall has moved to court seeking to stop the payment of Sh2.5 billion to people occupying Embakasi land acquired for construction of the Standard Gauge Railway (SGR). The county government told the High Court in Nairobi last week that the people seeking compensation have fake title deeds, and that the land belongs to the county. It said that the occupiers presented forged titles to be compensated for the public land and if they were paid, it would be a massive waste of public funds. The county claims the land was given to the defunct City Council of Nairobi in January 1954 but was invaded by 1,960 squatters in the 1990s. They have since built dwellings and continue to live there. In 2010, the Local Government ministry and Provincial Administration established Dafur and Dupoto settlement schemes in the area. The Council issued allotment letters but not titles have ever been given.

You can now get building approval in 30 days in Nakuru:

Nakuru County has cut the period it takes to get building plans approved to 30 days as it looks to close its housing gap, which stands at 10,000 units a year. The housing units are necessary to fill the gap created by a growing middle class in the town. Governor Kinuthia Mbugua said plans were in place to guide development of Nakuru over the next 20 to 30 years. The county government is also moving to improve slum settlements under the Kenya Informal Settlements Improvement Project. Areas targeted include Kaptembwo, Rhoda and Gilani.

harvesting, but the situation on the ground suggests that the business is a free-for-all, make-a-quick-buck affair.

According to statutory regulations, sand harvesting is strictly restricted to riverbeds, 50 metres from river banks and 100 metres from any infrastructure, including roads, bridges and railways. That means small streams which do not meet the width requirements, such as most of those exploited in Machakos, should be off the bounds for harvesters.

The authority advocates for the formation of localised riparian resource management associations aimed at regulating the activity and rehabilitating harvested regions. However, none of that has been done in the areas that we visited.

A lorryful of sand fetches as low as Sh1,000 and a maximum of Sh1,600 in the larger Machakos, which residents say is too little and does not reflect the damage the business is doing to their environment.

Several weeks ago a police boss was transferred from Mwala after residents accused him of collaborating with sand harvesters against their wishes of conserving the environment. But Mwangangi, the Yatta MP, feels more could be done, and has challenged the police leadership in Kangundo to stop the illegal harvesting of sand in the area.

Mwangangi, however, says the police might not have the motivation to fight the vice because some of them are involved in the business.

Contacted for comment, the office of Machakos Governor Alfred Mutua, through the director of communication Mutinda Mwanzia, said it was considering a total ban of sand harvesting in the county.

“The governor is committed to ensuring that the environment is protected. Sand scooping is a big challenge and it will be adequately addressed,” said Mwanzia.

However, Mwangangi insists that it is the Nema regulations that should inform the activity and not county government’s regulations since they have loopholes which have been used by unscrupulous people to continue destroying the environment.

“We have two options,” he says, “to take action, or watch as others destroy our environment.”

Some of the affected rivers

A few metres from the Mbiuni location chief’s office in Mwala, sand harvesters every day descend into the Mukuyuni stream and ferret away whatever they can. As a result of the exploitation, the once all-year-stream now cuts a sorry, dry image of its former self. Other rivers facing the same problem are Thwake, Miu, Muunzu, Matundua, Mwitasyano, Kinyongo, Thika and luuma.

Harvesters in Mwala and Yatta Sub-Counties have also turned their gaze towards River Athi, which cuts across several Ukambani districts, despite the effect their actions may have on the eco-system downstream, all the way to where the river empties its waters into the Indian Ocean at Sabaki, Malindi.

Technology involves mixing debris from construction sites with cement to make long blocks, meaning you have fewer joints

BY GITONGA MARETE
gmarete@ke.nationmedia.com

The high cost of mortgage loans and equally high construction costs have made owning a home a pipe dream for many Kenyans. However, one man has the technology that could just make home ownership easier for many Kenyans.

Haran Manyeki does not use the familiar standard bricks, but moulds longer ones, which hence reducing the number of joints on the walls.

His main raw material is what many would consider construction waste: the mounds of sand and debris found at construction sites that are often used to cover potholes. This is what he mixes with cement to build the walls.

"With this technology, you save on cement, labour and other related costs such as transporting materials, especially bricks, from quarries," he says. "In total, it can save between 30 and 50 per cent of the cost of walls, without the finishing."

So, where and how did he learn the technology?

Manyeki, who has a certificate in electrical engineering, did not like the prevailing method of wiring, which required that walls that had been plastered be drilled to enable the insertion of electric cables and pipes for plumbing.

So, one day while working on a house in Nakuru, he shared these sentiments with a colleague, who told him he had heard there was a way of incorporating the plumbing and wiring during construction.

"I searched the Internet until I found the technique, which is popular in South Africa," he says, adding that it took him several days to find the website.

However, since importing the moulding machine at the time cost about Sh50,000 and he did not have the money, he decided to make one himself.

"I did not want people to know what I was up to, so in order to learn how to weld metals, I would go to welding workshops and busy myself, pretending to help them," he offers.

Once he had mastered welding, he bought steel plates and rods, which cost him about Sh20,000.

"I then went underground and when I re-emerged, I had the machine," he says with a smile.

Pressed to explain the steps involved in making the machine he declines, saying that is his business secret.

"Of course I know copy cats will replicate it at some point but at the moment, I want to make maximum use of it," he adds.

When DN2 caught up with him at Mariakani in Kilifi County recently, he was finishing a three-bedroom house he had started building three months earlier.

The owner of the house, Manyeki said, had made huge savings on sand and cement, given that when construction is done using bricks, the inside walls tend to have huge depressions that have to be filled before they are plastered. But using his machine, both sides of the wall come out smooth.

While he buys the material at very low prices, in some areas, he gets it for free.

"Builders find it a challenge to dispose of the waste, so I buy it at between Sh100 and Sh400 per tonne, depending on the location," he says, adding that some people started selling it to him only after they discovered that he was minting money from what they considered useless.

But one of the challenges Manyeki faces is that people don't believe they can save as much as he tells them.

"When I tell somebody about the savings they ask, 'Can we see one of the houses you have built? May be it's fake.'"

"For those in places where I have not built a house, I have to show them pictures, but those who have seen my work say it is going to revolutionise the construction industry in the country," he says, adding that the technology can also be used to make water tanks.

"Using conventional bricks to build a water tank is not only time consuming since one has to cut them into curved shapes, but the joints also present weak points for the whole structure, leading to leakage," he explains, adding that he has made a machine that produces curved blocks, which he uses to build durable tanks that are not susceptible to leakage.

Today, nearly two years since he started off, he has built several houses in Nakuru and Mombasa, and dozens of water tanks. He markets his business online, especially through Facebook.

The order that each homestead in his rural home should have a latrine early last year came as a boon to him. While a block consisting of a toilet and bathroom costs more than Sh40,000 using bricks, his technology brings the cost down to Sh15,000, he says.

However, the question is whether Kenyans, known for their penchant for stone and mortar constructions — the market for fabricated houses has failed to take off — will embrace this new technology.

"The walls can be as strong as the cabro used on roads and depends on the cement ratios. But whatever the case, the costs are lower," says Manyeki.

Find ways of reducing permit fees, CS tells construction body

BY DN2 CORRESPONDENT

ACTING LANDS AND HOUSING Cabinet secretary Fred Matiang'i has asked the National Construction Authority (NCA) to come up with a proposal on how to reduce the amounts developers pay in permit fees.

The minister said developers are saddled with too many government fees, adding that by the time one puts up a building, they've spent a considerable sum on permits alone.

"We are not going to increase the fees. We want to reduce the fees that we are asking investors in the construction sector to pay to get permits. I need a proposal from you on how we are going to reduce the fees," he told the NCA board. "It's not going to be a case of increasing the percentages. We want investors to pay nominal facilitative fees. We did not form the National Construction Authority so that we could make money."

In June last year, then Lands CS Charity Ngilu, through a legal notice dated June 3, said that developers whose projects exceeded Sh5 million would pay a construction levy of 0.5 per cent of the value of the contract to the NCA.

The construction levy came on the back of increases in permit fees by the National Environment Management Authority (Nema) and counties like Nairobi.

Nema imposes a minimum charge of Sh10,000 or 0.1 per cent of the project cost for environmental impact assessment.

Nairobi, which accounts for most of the real estate activity in the country, also raised its permit fees to 1.25 per cent of the total construction cost in 2013.

Before the review, the county had been charging between 0.001 per cent and 0.006 per cent of the cost of construction.

The upward review of permit fees has seen them become a key revenue source for Nairobi. In the year ending June 2015, the county collected Sh1.3 billion, a Sh500 million jump from the previous year.

The multiple fees mean that in places like Nairobi, nearly two per cent of construction costs are attributable to permit fees. For a Sh100 million property, that means nearly Sh2 million.

Last month, Chinese corporate giant AVIC paid Sh97 million in approval fees to City Hall for the construction of its African headquarters in Westlands, highlighting the lucrative nature of the permit fees.

The fees impact on the final cost or rent for units, both commercial and residential, as developers look to recover the expenses that did not go into materials or labour. NCA's construction levy will also push up the cost of other infrastructure projects like roads, railways and ports, which are funded by taxpayers.

Mr Matiang'i also urged for the establishment of a one-stop shop for all the payments to make it easier for investors.

"This is where you have one centre where you pay the fees to the National Construction Authority, you do the Nema, you do the county government and then from there they can distribute the resources among the different entities," Mr Steve Oundo, the NCA chairman, said.

Fusion Capital receives ISO Certification

BY DN2 CORRESPONDENT

REAL ESTATE DEVELOPER AND PRIVATE equity group Fusion's quality management system processes have been certified as compliant under the ISO 9001:2008 standard.

The certification confirms that the quality processes and systems of the group's subsidiaries, Fusion Capital and Fusion Investment Management, meet specific criteria for ensuring consistent and continuously improving quality systems that fulfill customer requirements.

Fusion Capital is a real estate developer and fund manager targeting the needs of businesses in East and Central Africa. Fusion Investment Management provides investment services to investors.

The group's Chief Executive, Mr Luke Kinoti, said the organisation's international recognition was a milestone, allowing it to do business anywhere in the world. It also gives Fusion's potential partners confidence, he said.

"We are pleased to achieve this internationally known recognition for our quality systems and processes," Mr Kinoti said. "This emphasises how much quality is a priority for us, even in this era of tough economic times."

Fusion Director James Mageria, who led the certification process said his employees' commitment had brought the success.

"For ISO to succeed, commitment from management and everyone in an organisation is important and was clearly observed at Fusion," he said. "Any company that has achieved certification is definitely a step ahead of others on the road to success."

We are pleased to achieve this internationally known recognition for our quality systems and processes

— Luke Kinoti, CEO Fusion Capital

As part of a family of standards overseen by this international organisation, ISO 9001:2008 sets out the criteria for a company's quality management system, and includes a strong customer focus, involvement of top management and a process for continuous improvement.

Attaining ISO 9001:2008 involved a rigorous self-evaluation process undertaken over the course of one-and-a-half years, during which Fusion assessed its quality system and procedures. The company's work was then validated through an audit conducted by an external, accredited organisation. To maintain its certification, Fusion has committed to continuously assess its quality management systems and processes and undergo follow-up audits every six months.

Fusion Capital normally invests through its real estate financing programme, where it seeks partnership with landowners who contribute land while it funds construction. The company fully underwrites the project, provides project management, gets funding, and sells the property. In eight ongoing real estate projects, Fusion works in joint ventures and one of its pre-conditions is managing projects to ensure timely completion that is within the budget set.

Jacaranda promises better quality as Phase 3 kicks off

Developers seek to address Nairobi's growing accommodation needs by building affordable housing for middle and lower income earners

BY LILIAN OCHIENG'
laochieng@ke.nationmedia.com

Construction of a housing development targeting middle income earners at a cost of over Sh2 billion is currently underway in Kamiti Road, Nairobi.

The project, on the same location where the current Jacaranda Gardens stands, is among the first Chinese-owned local housing projects. It comes months after buyers of the first phases of the development claimed they had been short-changed by the developers, who promised them amenities that, the residents claimed, were not delivered.

The developers, however, explained that, while provision of the amenities had been delayed, they would still meet their end of the bargain.

Located about 15 minutes' drive from the City Centre, over 550 units of phases one and two of the project are already complete. Tom Shen, the Jacaranda human resource and legal affairs manager, says the estate stands on a 21-acre piece of land and is the biggest apartment project in East and Central Africa.

"Our target is to quell the demand fuelled by the housing shortage as we adhere to high quality standards, with high levels of environmental conservation," said Mr Shen.

The Chinese developer SIETCO also built Kasarani Stadium, Safari Park Hotel, and Regency Hotel, among others.

Nairobi, which is facing a rapid population growth, contributes the most to the country's housing demand of 200,000 units per year. Jacaranda Housing hopes to alleviate a bit of the demand by delivering additional units to the market. Phase three will have 290 units of two-, three- and four-bedroom houses.

The project joins the likes of Sunset Boulevard, also a multi-billion housing project targeting the middle class with serenity and high quality construction at the core of its projects. Sunset Boulevard is situated in Athi River with an estimated 400 units of housing ranging from two, three and four bedrooms.

Greatwall Apartments, a property of Edermann Property Ltd situated along Beijing Avenue, Mlolongo, off the Nairobi-Mombasa highway, also targets the middle income earners with affordable housing.

We ensure the best security for our tenants, the houses are available for rent as well as for purchase, we will surround the estate like a military camp."

IT WASN'T ME

Upon arrival, Peter went straight to the house. He had plenty of questions for his parents. Did they need his help? What was growing on their farm? How were the crops doing? These were the questions that his parents answered as they ate lunch with him.

After lunch, Peter did not want to waste any time. His father had asked him to help gather sticks for propping the tomato plants which were about to flower. He knew that it was after flowering that they would bear tomatoes. The sticks that were required to prop the tomato plants were about one metre long. They could be collected or cut from the bushes around the farm.

After getting a panga from the store, Peter set out for the bushes to look for the sticks. His father had given him a stick to use as a sample. The panga was well sharpened and could cut sticks the way a new razor blade would cut paper.

Yetu Sacco Society Ltd

OFFICIAL LAUNCH OF NAIROBI BRANCH

Date:
August 14, 2015

YETU Sacco a major contributor to cooperative success in Kenya

Message from the Cabinet Secretary, Ministry of Industrialization and Enterprise Development

Let me take this opportunity to congratulate the Board of directors, the management and members of Yetu Sacco Society Ltd as they officially open their Nairobi branch tomorrow. This occasion is a major milestone for the society.

The cooperative business model, unlike other business arrangements, is people-centred, based on the principle of accumulating resources through savings and eventually investing and creating wealth together. In this way, cooperatives have the potential to lift masses out of poverty and bridge income gaps. Through savings and credit and other types of cooperatives, many Kenyans are joining the middle-income bracket.

The growth of the cooperative movement is encouraging, with over 12 million Kenyans having been registered in more than 18,000 cooperative societies countrywide.

Mr Adan Mohammed, EBS

This, among other achievements, has contributed to the rating of Kenya as the leading country in Africa by size and rate of growth of her co-operative movement. It is our desire that Kenyans will in future be facilitated to own and manage the production and services sectors of our economy through the cooperative business model.

Yetu Sacco, a leading rural Sacco in Kenya, is a contributor to this success, with its more than 23,000 members contributing Sh2.1 billion currently towards national savings.

I urge all co-operators to be innovative and cost-effective in service delivery in order to maximise benefits to their members and to continuously enlighten their members on emerging saving techniques for them to achieve their desired financial goals.

Once again let me congratulate Yetu sacco and wish them success.

Message from the Sacco Societies Regulatory Authority (SASRA) CEO

It gives me great pleasure to extend my warmest congratulations to Yetu Sacco as you launch your Nairobi Branch.

Yetu Sacco is licensed as a deposit-taking Sacco by the Sacco Societies Regulatory Authority (SASRA). It is one of the leading financial institutions in the Sacco sub-sector in Kenya. The Sacco has grown its asset level to Sh1.7 billion, comprising of a loan portfolio and other assets of Sh1.3 billion and Sh0.4 billion respectively as at 2014 audited books.

The Sacco has been supported by a strong savings base and reserves of Sh1.2 billion and Sh0.4 billion respectively. This is important for a financial service provider.

The Authority is happy with the channels adopted in taking services closer to members, including branch expansion. SASRA is very supportive of any measures put in place to enhance financial access and inclusion within the sub-sector.

Once again, congratulations on your celebrations. I wish you continued success in your future endeavours.

Message from the Chairman

Giant Rural Based SACCO expands into capital city

It gives me immense joy to be part of this official launch of the Nairobi branch of Yetu SACCO Ltd. This is one of our hallmarks of being concerned about the success of our members.

At inception, our membership was drawn from tea growers in Imenti South district, now the Imenti South sub-County. We have since opened our common bond and re-branded to Yetu SACCO Ltd.

Over the years, Yetu SACCO Society Ltd, formerly South Imenti Tea Growers SACCO Society Ltd, has grown in leaps, especially after rebranding in 2010.

Thus, the crafting of the name "YETU" (Kiswahili for "Our own") gave the society a green light to extend its services into a wider arena and to broaden its scope.

Christopher K. Ndegwa, HSC

Launching the Nairobi branch and opening of Meru Branch validates Yetu SACCO Ltd consistency in expanding its network.

Despite the reduction of benefits from tea produce in the global markets, the society has ensured an upward growth through innovation and creativity to guarantee high returns to members.

We have continued to grow in asset base, hitting the Sh2.1 billion-mark at the end of June 2015.

Through a positive savings mobilisation and the culture on daily collections at members' business premises, the Sacco has been able to raise members' deposits from Sh680 million to Sh1.4 billion in the last five years. The loan book and other assets have grown from Sh750 million five years ago to Sh2.1 billion currently.

The growth of the society is linked to the high level of innovativeness among our staff, who continue to work well as a team.

Innovative people never worry about the competition, or even about copycats, because they are always ahead. By the time the competition copies and domesticates our ideas, we are already ahead developing a new one.

Upon re-branding to Yetu SACCO Society Ltd, we adopted a "ground-up" approach to market penetration. Our strategy was to create the strongest presence on the ground by reaching every farmer in the remotest of areas, including those that had not been previously reached.

We never looked back. We never hesitated to conquer. We grown geographically, expanded our products quality and range, and improved delivery processes and methodologies.

Delighting our customers remained the focus of our operations. A satisfied customer belies the society's growth. We put in place programmes for personal and professional development. We held on to our values of honesty, openness, equity and equality, fairness, mutual and social responsibility.

The Board of Directors view the progress of the society to be bright and have laid down strategies to achieve core objectives.

ICT has been identified as a key pillar in enhancing service delivery. A huge investment has been done to modernise our ICT system.

In leveraging on new technology, the society will infuse innovation to develop new and affordable products, improve service delivery and attract growth in our membership. We are simply member-focused.

Message from the Chief Executive Officer, Yetu Sacco

Yetu SACCO stands tall in service delivery to members

At Yetu Sacco Society Ltd, customer experience is core to our strength in membership growth and service delivery.

We have made a distinct mark, owing to our rapid response to customer concerns, listening skills and unique service delivery that has greatly endeared us to our members.

Just like our name, "Yetu", every member has equal ownership rights and a duty in the running of the Sacco.

We educate members on the right ways to invest. We enable them to make proper decisions when borrowing. The society's staff view members not just through a humanitarian lens but also through the perspective of economic opportunity and growth.

Continually, we have invested in cutting-edge technology. Members are able to query our system using their mobile phones. They can borrow instant loans without human interactions. Also, we have a state-of-the-art biometric Automated Teller Machine (ATM) that is of its kind and the first in Kenya.

John M. Rukaria
Chief Executive Officer, Yetu Sacco

It is noteworthy that Yetu Sacco has been licensed to issue personal cheques, improving our competitiveness in sections of the market that previously shunned us for not having cheque books for payments.

As we officially launch the Nairobi Branch, it is gratifying to note that we are now playing in the major league and no longer a rural Sacco. We are humbled by this growth.

Early August 2015, we officially opened doors in Meru town with our newest branch located at Karagania House. This added to our growing number of outlets, enabling us to attract membership from other sectors.

As a way of ensuring qualitative investment for our members, Yetu Sacco board approved the registration of Yetu Pamoja Investment Corporative Society Ltd (YPICS). This will help in the management of equities, fixed income and securities, and the society's assets, which include the eight-storey Majani Plaza, that houses Mt Kenya University, Nkubu Campus.

We have continued to rank competitively ahead of our peers. During the 2014 Ushirika Day celebrations, Yetu Sacco scooped five trophies, among them being named the Best Managed SACCO overall in the country.

In the just concluded 2015 Ushirika Day Celebrations, the society was crowned the best insured Sacco at county level. We were also awarded for having the Second Highest Average Member Savings at the national level, Second Best Managed Sacco overall in Kenya, the Sacco with the least expenditure countrywide, and the best managed Sacco in the rural sector.

Certainly, we have progressed to a point where we have set our sights higher and dreamt more boldly towards achieving greater things with relentless focus. We have adopted a stronger national identity that will carry us into the future.

Vision

A model Sacco, social and economic member empowerment.

Mission

To ensure high return to members, while promoting the underlying cooperatives principles in a changing environment.

Core Values

- Self-Help
- Honesty
- Openness
- Equity and Equality
- Fairness
- Mutual and social Responsibility

Objectives

- To mobilise savings and provide cheap credit to members.
- To eradicate poverty and improve the living standards of members.
- To promote education of members' children and fight illiteracy.
- To overcome exploitation and harsh conditions provided by other financial institutions.
- To educate and enlighten members on better savings habits and investments to achieve financial development.

On Behalf of CoreTEC Systems & Solutions Ltd, we, the Chairman, Board of Directors, Management and Staff would like to extend to our congratulations to YETU SACCO SOCIETY on the Launch & Commissioning of their Nairobi Branch. HONGERA!

Origin and growth

Yetu Sacco is a nation-wide licensed deposit-taking Sacco regulated by Sacco Societies Regulatory Authority (SASRA). It offers a wide array of products and services to its members, and keeps on innovating to introduce new ones to suit the financial needs of a dynamic membership.

The SACCO was established in 1991, registered then as South Imenti Tea Growers Sacco Ltd. The name Yetu Sacco Ltd was adopted in 2010 when the administrative areas moved beyond South Imenti in Meru County.

"Yetu" is a Swahili word that means "our own", coined from members' commitment in building their own sacco.

The founders had a dream, and through their visionary leadership, committed members and a good economic environment, Yetu Sacco has built a rich history.

The initial seed capital was Sh200,000, drawn from 200 members. Currently, Yetu Sacco is a leading and progressive financial institution in the country, with its main goal being to realise a sustained economic growth and employment, and therefore enhanced social welfare and increased income to its members.

The Sacco has registered remarkable growth since inception. As at June 2015, it had an asset base of Sh2.1 billion and a membership of over 23,000.

Over the years, we have continued to grow a diverse membership and increased income for the enterprising Kenyan population, such as investment groups and small and medium enterprises with dreams to achieve great things.

Currently, Yetu Sacco is the leading rural based progressive savings and credit society in the country.

YESTERDAY'S SOLUTION

CODEWORD

Each number in our Codeword grid represents a different letter of the alphabet. For example, today 17 represents F so fill in F every time the figure 17 appears. You have two letters in the control grid to start you off. Enter them in the appropriate squares in the main grid, then use your knowledge of words to work out which letters should go in the missing squares. As you get the letters, fill in other squares with the same number in the main grid and control grid. Check off the list of alphabetical letters as you identify them.

YOUR STARS

AQUARIUS | JAN 21 - FEB 19
The world around you is going faster than you are comfortable with. Be sure to take some time alone today in order to cool down and give yourself a break from the whirlwind of energy around you. You need a mental time-out from the insanity.

PISCES | FEB 20 - MAR 20
For most of the day you will be feeling on top of your game. Just make sure you don't get too over-confident. When you assert yourself today, you must realize that people who usually go along with what you say might actually snap back with defiance.

ARIES | MAR 21 - APR 20
The hostile attitude in the workplace is likely to have quite a negative effect on you today if you are not careful. Your sensitive nature is not fully equipped to deal with the bombardment from the people around you. Wear a suit of armour today.

TAURUS | APR 21 - MAY 20
You are going into battle as opposed to simply going into the workplace. You will feel at odds with the people you come in contact with. Someone is reaching for the stapler at the same time you are and you bump heads. It's just one of those days.

GEMINI | MAY 21 - JUNE 21
Your confidence will pay off. People are not going to have faith in a leader who is vacillating and hesitant. Demonstrate that you are a good leader by being assertive and sure of yourself. Hold your chest high and you will command great respect.

CANCER | JUN 22 - JULY 22
You will feel off-balance with the people in your office today. It seems that everyone is operating under a different wavelength, making it difficult for you to connect with people the way you need to. This is not the day to force a team effort.

LEO | JULY 23 - AUG 22
People are a bit jumpy around the office today, so proceed with caution. If someone rubs you the wrong way, try not to lash out at this person too harshly. Your tendency may be to do so, even without realizing it. Keep hurtful comments to yourself.

VIRGO | AUG 23 - SEP 23
TYou are ready to take the lead on a certain project at work, but unfortunately, it seems that one of your co-workers has the same idea. Sharing the leadership role is not going to be so easy, so don't bother trying. Find a different solution.

LIBRA | SEP 24 - OCT 23
Don't be a pushover today. Make sure you stand up for yourself when you know that someone is trying to hand you the short end of the stick. Be sure that you are getting fair pay and fair recognition for your services and hard work.

SCORPIO | OCT 24 - NOV 22
People aren't afraid to give you their two cents today even if you did not ask for it. As these opinions fly at you, you are likely to get more and more confused. Instead of trying to make sense of everyone else's opinion, just listen to yourself.

SAGITTARIUS | NOV 23 - DEC 21
People may look at you as if you are crazy today for suggesting the things that are on your mind.

Don't let them place seeds of doubt in your head. People may be weary because they are scared. Lead by example and demonstrate that your way is best.

CAPRICORN | DEC 22 - JAN 20
Power struggles get you into trouble on Monday; lay low until Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday when you don't have as much to prove. The Moon tries to rush you through your days on Friday and Saturday, so it will be ultra important that you take your time and not skip over any important steps

To receive NATIONmobile horoscopes on your mobile, SMS the Star you want, eg LEO to 20667 at 5/- above normal rates.

TREAT OF THE DAY

TROPICAL PARADISE 6:00PM
Telma says that she was responsible for the scam and asks Daniel for twenty thousand to change her version to the police. Daniel promises to bring her the money the next day. Daniel recorded the conversation with Telma and takes it to the police chief. Olavo asks Jáder to give Telma money and to tell her to leave the country. Olavo transfers money from the Group's account to his to pay Telma. Fred thinks he's running a risk. Bebel gets furious when she realizes that Jáder wants her to work for him. Jáder pays Telma. Telma is followed by thugs, falls off the Aqueduct and dies. The money ends up in a rubbish truck.
